gods and the sea.

eyk-reiði, n. the harness of an eykr, Gpl. 358. EYKT, eykð, f. three or half-past three o'clock P.M.; many commentaries have been written upon this word, as by Pal Víðalín Skýr., Finn hanson in H.E. i. 153 sqq. note 6, and in Horologium, etc. The time eykð is clearly defined in K. þ. K. 92 as the time when the sun has past o parts of the 'útsuðr' (q.v.) and has one part left, that is to say, half-past three o'clock P.M.: it thus nearly coincides with the eccl. Lat. nona (three o'clock P.M.); and both eykt and nona are therefore used indiscrimi-nately in some passages. Sunset at the time of 'eykð' is opposed to sune at the time of 'dagmál,' q.v. In Norway 'ykt' means a luncheon taken about half-past three o'clock. But the passage in Edda—that tuma ends and winter begins at sunset at the time of eykt—compounded the commentators, who believed it to refer to the conventional winter, which (in the old style) begins with the middle of October, and ends six months. In the latitude of Reykholt—the residence of Snorri—the sun at this time sets about half-past four. Upon this statement the commentators have based their reasoning both in regard to dagmál and ykt, placing the eykt at half-past four P.M. and dagmál at half-past seven P.M., although this contradicts the definition of these terms in the law.
The passage in Edda probably came from a foreign source, and refers not to the Icel. winter but to the astronomical winter, viz. the winter solstice the shortest day; for sunset at half-past three is suited not to Icel., but to the latitude of Scotland and the southern parts of Scandinavia.
The word is also curious in its bearing upon the discovery of America the ancients, vide Fb. i. e. This sense (half-past three) is now obsolete in Icel., but eykt is in freq. use in the sense of triborium, a time of three hours; whereas in the oldest Sagas no passage has been found bearing this sense,—the Bs. i. 385, 446, and Hem. l. c. are of the 13th and 14th centuries. In Norway ykt is freq. used metaph. of all the four meal times the day, morning-ykt, midday-ykt, afternoon-ykt (or ykt proper), and evening-ykt. In old MSS. (Grág., K. þ. K., Hem., Heið. S.) this word is always written eykð or eykþ, shewing the root to be 'auk' with the fem. inflex.
-að; it probably first meant the ek-meal, answering to Engl. lunch, and thence came to mean the time of day at which this meal was taken. The eccl. law dilates upon the word, as the Sabbath was to begin at 'hora

EYRIR, m., gen. eyris, dat. and acc. eyri; pl. aurar, gen. aura, dat. aurum; a word prob. of foreign origin, from Lat. aurum, Fr. or, Engl. ore; (A. S. ora is, however, prob. Danish.) The first coins known in Scandinavia were Roman or Byzantine, then Saxon or English; as the old word baugr (q. v.) denoted unwrought, uncoined gold and silver, so eyrir prob. originally meant a certain coin:

I. an ounce of silver or its amount in money, the eighth part of a mark; an eyrir is=sixty pennies (pennin-gar)=three ertog; tutugu pennin-gar vegnir í örtug, þrír örtugar í eyri, átta aurar í mörk, 732. 16; silfr svá sleigt at sextigri penninga gördi eyri veginn, Grág. i. 500; penning, þat skal hinn tundi (prob. a false reading, x instead of lx) hlutr eyris, 357; hálfis eyris met ek hverjan, I value each at a half eyrir, Glúm. (in a verse); leigja skap þrem aurum, to hire a boat for three aurar, Korm.; einn eyrir þess fjár heitir alaðs-festr, Grág. i. 88; the phrase, goldinn hverr eyrir, every ounce paid; galt Guðmundr hvern eyri þá þegar, Sturl. i. 141; gjalda tvá aura fyrir einn, to pay two for one, Grág. i. 396, ii. 234; verðr þá at hálfri mörk vadmála eyrir, then the eyrir amounts to half a mark in wadmál, i. 500; brent silfr, ok er eyririnn at mörk lögaura, pure silver, the ounce of which amounts to a mark in lögaurar, 392; hring er stendr sex aura, a ring worth or weighing six aurar, Fms. ii. 246; hence baugr tví-eyringr, tvítug-eyringr, a ring weighing two or twenty aurar, Eb., Glúm.

β. as a weight of other things beside silver; hagi hvert vá eyri, every bail-stone weighed an ounce, Fms. i. 175; stæltr lé ok vegi áttan aura, eggelningr, þeir skulu þrír fyrir tvá aura, a seytle of wrought steel and weighing eighteen aurar, an ell-long edge, three such cost two aurar (in silver), the proportion between the weight in wrought iron and the weight in silver being 1:28, Grág. i. 501.

γ. the amount of an ounce, without any notion of the medium of payment, hence such phrases as, tólf aura silfrs, twelve aurar to be paid in silver, Nj. 54; eyrir brendr, burnt eyrir, i. e. an eyrir sterling, pure silver, D. N.

II. money in general; skal þar sinn eyri hverjum dæma, to every one his due, his share, Grág. i. 125; in proverbs, ljósir aurar verða at löngum trega, bright silver brings long woe, Sl. 34; margr verðr af aurum api, Hm. 74; illr af aurum, a miser, Jd. 36; vára aura, our money, Vkv. 13; leggja aura, to lay up Dan. lösöre, Swed. lösören), F. hafa fyrirgört löndum ok lausum eyri, K. Á. 94.

2. money or the allit. phrase, aurar ok óðal, money and estates, N. G. L. i. 4. hann vill taka við aurum slíku (such payment) sem váttr vitu at reiddi honum, 93; þeim aurum öllum (all valuables) sem til búu vóru keyptir, Grág. i. 412; Flosi spurði í hverjum aurum hann vild hafa, F. asked in what money he wished to be paid, Nj. 259; aurar, such money as is legal tender; þú skalt gjalda mér vaðm skilrað hann frá aðra aura, other kinds of payment, Grág. i. 392 borinn eyrir, in the phrase, mér er það enginn útborinn (or útbu eyrir, I do not want to part with it, offer it for sale; eyrir vaðmála ment in wadmál (stuff), 300, Bs. i. 639; for the double standard, the woollen (ells), the other metal (rings or coin), and the confusion between them, see Dasent's Burnt Njal, vol. ii. p. 397 sqq.; at different times the ell standard varied much, and we hear of three, six, nine, twelve standards (vide alin, p. 13); in such phrases as 'mörk sex álina' the word 'mörk' denotes the amount, 'sex álina' the standard, and the payment = payment of 'a mark of six ells,' cp. a pound sterling, K. 172; hundrað (the amount) þriggja álina (the standard) aura, S. 141, 163, Boll. 362, Ísl. ii. 28; mörk sex álina eyris, Fsk. 10, N. ## F

F (eff), the sixth letter, was in the Gothic Runes, on the Bracteates, and on the stone in Tune, marked ƿ, a form evidently derived from the Greek and Latin; hence also comes the Anglo-Saxon F called feob, and in the Scandinavian Runes ƿ called fē (= fee, money), fē veldr enda rögi, Rkv. 1. The Runic alphabet makes f the first letter, hence this alphabet is sometimes by modern writers called Fupork. The first six letters are called Freys-ætt, the family of Frey; perhaps the others called this Rune Frauja = Freyr, the lord. Only in very early Icel. MSS. is the old Latin form of f used: at the beginning of the 13th century the Anglo-Saxon form F (derived from the Rune) prevailed; and was employed in printed Icel. books till about A. D. 1770, when the Latin f came into use. In very early MSS. f and ft are very difficult to distinguish from ff and ft. Emendations may sometimes be made by varying this in mind, e. g. hóstú, Am. 95, should clearly be read hóstú hóst þú, from hesja,—proving that this poem was in writing not later than about A. D. 1200, when the Anglo-Saxon letter was introduced.

A. PRONUNCIATION.—At the beginning of a syllable always sounded Engl. f; but as a medial and final, it is often pronounced and sometimes spelt v, especially after a vowel, so that in af, ef, lauf, gefa, hafa, afa, lifa, lif, gröf, f is pronounced like the v, as in Engl. grave. Foreign proper names, Stefan (Stephen), etc., are exceptions, where f not initial has aspirate sound. For the exceptional spelling of f as b vide introduction to B. (pp. 48, 49). The Icel. dislike a double f sound, which is only found in a very few modern foreign words, such as kaffe, coffee; fur, German. strafe, punishment; koffort, a box (from French or Germ.); fur, an offer; skoffinn, a monster; skeffa, a 'sweep' or bushel; skúffa, a sower; eff, the name of the letter itself, cp. Skálda 166.

B. SPELLING. I. as an initial the spelling never changes; medial and final the form f is usually retained, as in álfr, kálfr, sjálfr, fr, arfr, orfr, úlfr, etc., af, gaf, haf, etc., although the sound is soft in all these syllables. Some MSS. used to spell fv, especially after an l, sialfvann (sum), halfvann (dimidium), etc.; in the 14th century this was common, but did not continue; in Swedish it prevailed, hence the mod. Swed. forms fva, drifva, etc.

II. the spelling with f is against the true etymology in many cases, and here also the spelling differs; this is especially the case with the final radical v or u (after a vowel or after l or r), which, being in some cases suppressed or obsolete, reappears and is differently spelt; thus, örfar, arrows (from ör); snjófar (nives), snou, and snjófa, to snow (from snjó); háfan (acc.), higb (from hár); mjófan, thin (from ör); sæfar (gen.), the sea (from sær): the partly obsolete dal forms li, mjölvi, Mávi, bövi, heyvi, hövi, smjölvi, lævi from öl (ale), mjöl (meal), hey (hay), etc. are also spelt ölfi... heyfi, cp. e. g. Eb. 94 new note 8: so also adjectives, as örfan (acc. from ör), liberal: nouns, völfa or völva, a prophetess.

III. the spelling with pt in such words as, aptan, evening; aptr, after; leiptr, lightning; dript, drift; pt, Germ. duft; heipt, cp. Germ. beftig; kraptr, Germ. kraft; aptari, tri,—aptari, eftir, apt, behind; eptir, after; skipta, to shift; lopt, Germ. lo; kjöptr, Germ. kiefte; opt, often; nipt (from nefi), a sister; hapt, baft, hepta, to baft; gipta, a gift; rapt, a rafter; tópt, cp. Engl. toft, un. toft; skapt, Engl. shaft, Dan. skaft; þopta, Dan. tofte,—is against the sense and etymology and is an imitation of Latin MSS. The earliest MSS. and almost all Norse MSS. use ft, and so also many Icel. MSS., e. g. Flateyjar-bók, Hauks-bók, etc.; pt, however, is the regular spelling, and hence it came into print. The present rule appears to be to use pt wherever both consonants are radicals, but ft if the t be inflexive—thus ft part. from hafa, lift from lifa, hlift from hlifa; but in speaking pt and ft are both sounded alike, regardless of etymology, viz. both as ft or with a soft f sound; hence phonetic spelling now and then occurs in MSS., e. g. draft = drapt, from drepa, Fb. i. 149; efde = æpdi = æpti, from æ, to weep, Bs. i. 342; keyfti, from kaupa, Greg. 50; steyfti, from stypa. β. a digraph ff or pf occurs a few times in MSS., eftfri, cp. 3. A. 2; loptti = lopti, Greg. 72 (vide Frump. 100), but it never came to use; it reminds one of the pf which in modern German is so frequent: fm = f or m, e. g. namn = nafn or namn, Mork. 60 and N. G. L. ssim; ff = f also occurs in old MSS.

C. CHANGES.—The final soft Icel. f answers to Engl. f, ve, e. g. Icel. = Engl. life, but Icel. lifa = Icel. to live; gefa, to give; hafa, to have; afa, to leave. Again, the spurious Icel. f (B. II) usually answers to Engl. or like, e. g. örfar = Engl. arrow; snjófar = Engl. snow; már máfi, Engl. mew; Icel. nær (the v here suppressed), cp. Engl. narrow; Icel. ri, cp. Engl. lewd, etc. (etc.). In Danish the soft f is usually spelt with e, e. g. balv, kalv, bav, give, love, sove, = Icel. hálfir, kálfr, haf, gefa, lofa, fa, whereas the Swedes frequently keep the f. In German a final b answers to Icel. f; Germ. geben = Icel. gefa, Engl. give; Germ. kalb, erbal, Icel. kálfr, arfi, etc., see introduction to B. Again, in German a final r answers to Icel. and Engl. p, e. g. Germ. lauf = Icel. hlaup, Engl. to run; Germ. kauf = Icel. kaup, Engl. cheap; Germ. schiff = Icel. skip, Engl. ship; also schiff; Germ. treff = Icel. drep; Germ. tief = Icel. djúpr, Engl.

deep; Germ. haufen = Icel. hópr, Engl. heap; Germ. rufen = Icel. hrópa; Germ. schaffen = Icel. skapa, Engl. shape; Germ. saufen = Icel. súpa, Engl. to sup; Germ. hofte = Icel. huppr, Engl. hip; Germ. greifen = Icel. grípa, Engl. to grapple, grip; Germ. gaffen = Icel. gapa, Engl. gape; Germ. offen = Icel. opinn, Engl. open; Germ. affe = Icel. api, Engl. ape; Germ. triefen = Icel. drjúpa, Engl. drip; Germ. tropfen = Icel. dropi, Engl. drop. As to the use of the initial f, the Engl., Icel., Swed., and Dan. all agree; the High Germ. spelling is confused, using either f or v, but both of them are sounded alike, thus voll = Engl. full, Icel. fullr; vier = Engl. four, Icel. fjórir; vater = Engl. father, Icel. faðir, etc.; but fisch = Engl. fish, Icel. fiskr; fest = Engl. fast, Icel. fast. This German v, however, seems to be dying out (Grimm, introduction to F).

2. for the change of fn and mn, see introduction to B: f changes to m in a few Icel. words, as himinn, cp. Engl. heaven; hellingr, a half, from halfr, half.

D. INTERCHANGE.—The Greek and Latin p answers to Teutonic and Icel. f; thus, pater, paucus, piscis, πέντε, πῦρ, πῶλος, πέcu, pellis, πίαν, pinguis, plecto, pes, πόδ-ús, pallos, etc., cp. Icel. faðir, fár, fiskr, sum, furr, foli, fé, fell (feldr), feitr, flétta, fet and fótr, fölr, etc.; Lat. portare = færa, Engl. to ford; se-pelio = sela; πτερόν = fjóðr and fibr; πνέω and πνεύμα, cp. fnasa; Lat. per, pro, pro-, cp. fyrir; Lat. plenus, pleo, πλεων, πλέος, cp. fullr; πλοῖον = fley; Lat. prior, πρώτος, cp. fyrir, fyrstr; Lat. primus, cp. frum-; Lat. plures, plérique, πολλός, πλείστος, πολύς, = fjöl-, fjöld, fleiri, flestr; Lat. plicare = falda; Lat. prætium, cp. fríðr, fríðindi, etc. (vide Grimm). Again, where no interchange has taken place the word is usually borrowed from the Greek or Latin, e. g. fork, Engl. fork, = Lat. furca; Icel. fals, falskr, = Lat. falsus; Icel. fálki = Lat. falco, etc.

II. a white linen hood, the stately national head-gear worn by ladies in Icel., of which drawings are given by Eggert in pp. 24, 27, Sir Joseph Banks in Hooker's Travels, the account of the French expedition of the year 1836 sq., and in almost all books of travels in Iceland. In old Sagas or poems the fald is chiefly recorded in Ld. ch. 33 the dreams of Guðrún Osvalds datter, cp. Sd. ch. 25; in the Orkn. S. ch. 8 the two sisters Frakök and Helga, daughters of the Gaelic Moddan, wore a fald (þá hnyktu þar af sér faldinn, ok reyttu sik), 182. In E. Km. (a poem probably composed in the Western Isles, Orkneys) all the three women, Edda, Amma, and Móðir, wore the fald; the words þkv. 16, 19—ok haglega um höfuð typpum, and let us cleverly put topping on his head, of Thor in bridal disguise—seem to refer to the fald. Bishop Bjarni, a native of the Orkneys (died A.D. 1222), gives the name of 'fald' to the helmet; Kormak, in the 10th century, speaks of the 'old faldar.' In Normandy and Brittany a kind of 'fald' is still in use; it may be that it came to Icel. through Great Britain, and is of British origin; a French fald (Franseiskr, i.e. Britain?) is mentioned, D.N. 359. In Icel. the fald was, up to the end of the last century, worn by every lady,—aðr sérhver fald þar frú í falg þótti venja sú, a ditty. The ladies tried to outdo each other in wearing a tall fald; keisti ldr, the fald rose high, Rm. 26; falda hátt, Eb. (the verse); hence the realistic name stiku-faldr, a 'yard-long fald'; stífan teygja stiku-fald, agnarmál 53, a poem of 1728; 1 Tim. ii. 9 is in the Icel. version understood, eigi með földum (πάγλαστ) eðr gulli eðr perlum,—since with ancient women, and in Icel. up to a late time, braiding of the hair was most unknown. In mod. poetry, Iceland with her glaciers is represented as a woman with her fald on; minn hefir faldr fengið fjuka-ryk og ám, Eggert: the sails are called faldar mastra, hoods of the masts, faldar mastra blöktu stílt, Úlf. 3. 14; hestar hlés hvíta skóku falda trés, id., 10; ldr skýja, the folds of the clouds, poet., Núm. i. 11; faldar af degi, of the dybreak, 4. 86; vide krók-faldr, sveigr, a crooked fald. faldar-feykir, a magical dance in which the falds flew off the ladies' heads, Fas. iii; Percy's Fryar and Boy, also the Wonderful Flute in Popular Tales.

Fal-hófnir, m. barrel-hoof, hollow-hoof, a mythol. horse, Edda.

FÍMT or fímmt, f. a number of five: fímtar-tala, u, f. a set of five or multiple of five (as fifteen, fifty, etc.), Bs. i. 190. 2. [Swed. femt = a kind of court], a law phrase, a summoning before a court with a notice of five days: a standing phrase in the Norse law, so that the verb fímta means to summon: so, fímtar-gríð, n. pl. a truce during a fímt, N. G. L. i. 342, 351; fímmtar-nafn, n. a citation with a fímt's notice, 86; fímmtar-stefna, u, f. a citation before a court with a fímt's notice, K. Á. 184: the phrase gera e-m fímt simply means to summon, N. G. L. i. 346, passim; one fímt is the shortest notice for summoning, five fímms the longest,—fímm fímtum hit lengsta, ef hann veit nær þing skal vera, 21:—the law provides that no summoning shall take place on Tuesday, because in that case the court-day would fall on Sunday, the day of summoning not being counted, N. G. L., Jb., and K. Á. passim.—This law term is very curious, and seems to be a remnant of the old heathen division of time into fímms (pentads), each month consisting of six such weeks; the old heathen year would then have consisted of seventy-two fímms, a holy number, as composed of 2 × 36 and 6 × 12.

With the introduction of the names of the planetary days (vide dagr) and the Christian week, the old fímt only remained in law and common sayings; thus in Hm. 73,—'there are many turns of the weather in five days (viz. a fímt), but more in a month,' which would be unintelligible unless we bear in mind that a fímt just answered to our week; or verse 50,—'among bad friends love flames high for five days, but is slaked when the sixth comes'; in a few cases, esp. in ecclesiastical law, sjaund (hebdomad) is substituted for the older fímt, N. G. L. passim; it is curious that in Icel. law (Grág.) the fímt scarcely occurs, as in Icel. the modern week seems to have superseded the old at an early time. COMPDS:

Fímtar-dómr, m. the Fifth High Court in the Icel. Commonwealth, vide dómr, Grág. þ. þ., etc.; the form of the word is irregular, as it means the Fifth Court (added to the four Quarter Courts) = dómr hinn fímmti, as it is also called in Grág. þ. þ. ch. 24 sqq.; the old Scand. law term fímt seems to have floated before the mind of the founders, as fímtar-dómr etymologically answers to Swed. femt, i. e. a court before which one has to appear a 'fímt' from the citation. Fímtardóms-eiðr, m. the oath to be taken in the Fifth Court, Grág. þ. þ. ch. 26, 27, Nj. 241; in Sturl. ii. 128 used of an oath worded as the oath in the Fifth Court.

Fímtardóms-lög, n. pl. the institution of F., Íb. 13, Nj. 166. Fímtardóms-mál, n. an action before the Fifth Court, Nj. 231. Fímtardóms-stefna, u, f. a citation before the Fifth Court, Nj. 168. Fímtardóms-sök, f. a case to be brought before the Fifth Court, Grág. i. 360, Nj. 244.

fímtar-þing, n. a (Norse) meeting called so, Js. 41.

FÍNGR, m., gen. fingrar, mod. fingrs; dat. fingri; pl. fingr; a neut. fingr occurs in O. H. L. 73, 74, which gender is still found in Swed. dialects; the acc. pl. is in conversation used as fem., an Icel. says allar fingr, not alla fingr [Goth. fingrs; A. S. finger, etc.; whereas Lat. digitus and Gr. δάκτυλος etymologically answer to Icel. tá, Engl. toe, Germ. zehe, a finger of the foot]:—a finger, Grág. i. 498, Hkr. ii. 380, 384, Magn. 518, passim: the names of the fingers—þumal-fingr, the thumb; vísi-f., the index finger, also called sleiki-f., lick-finger; langa-töng, long-prong; græði-f., leech-finger, also, but rarely, called baug-f., digitus annuli; litli-f., the little finger. Sayings or phrases:—playing with one's fingers is a mark of joy or happiness—leika fingrum (Rm. 24), or leika við fingr sér (sína), Fms. iv. 167, 172, víð 172, Orkn. 324, mod. leika við hvern sinn fingr; also spila fingrum, id., Fbr. 198; víta e-ð upp á sínar tíu fingr, to know a thing on one's ten fingers, i. e. have at one's fingers' ends; fetta fingr úti e-t, to find fault with; rétta e-m fingr, digitu monstrare, Grett. 117; sjá ekki fingr sinna skil, not to be able to distinguish one's fingers, of blindness, Bs. i. 118: other phrases are rare and of foreign origin, e. g. sjá í gegnum fingr við e-n, to shut one's eyes to a thing, etc.; fingr digrir, thick fingers, of a clown, Rm. 8; þú mjó-fingraðr, taper-fingered, epithet of a lady, 36; fingra-mjúkr, nimble-fingered; fingrar-pykkr, a finger thick, Al. 165; fingrar gómr, a finger's end, Fs. 62; fingra staðr, the print of the fingers, Symb. 59; fingrar breidd, a finger's breadth. In the Norse law (N. G. L. i. 172) the fingers are taxed, from the thumb at twelve ounces, to the little finger at one ounce—not so in the curious lawsuit recorded in Sturl. i. ch. 18–27. Also a measure, a finger's breadth, Nj. 27, cp. MS. 732. 5; arithm. any number under ten, Alg. 362: botan., skolla-fingr, a kind of fern, lycopodium. fingra-járn, n. a 'finger-iron,' a thimble (?), Dipl. v. 18. fingr-hæð, f. a finger's height, as measure.

fingr-höggva, hjó, to bew one's finger off, Ann. 1342. fingrungr, m. a finger-ring, Stj. 191.

FINNA, pret. fann, 2nd pers. fannst, mod. faust; pl. fundu; pres. finn and finnr; in old MSS. and poetry freq. fiðr, Hm. 23, but finnr 63; pret. subj. fynda; part. fundinn; sup. fundit; the forms funnu and funnit may be found in MSS., but were probably never so pronounced; for even in Haustl. bund and fundu rhyme together; with the neg. suff. fannka, Hm. 38: [Ulf. finþan; A. S. findan; Engl. find; Germ. finden; Swed. finna; Dan. finde]:—to find; Finnar kómu apr ok höfðu fundit hlutinn, Landn. 174; hann leitar ok fiðr, Ísl. ii. 321; Knútr hinn Fundni, Canute the Foundling, Fms. i. 112; hann herjaði á Ísland ok fann þar jarðhús mikit, Landn. 32; fundu þeir Hjörleif dauðan, 35; þar fundusk undir bein, Ld. 328.

2. to meet one; hvergu opt hann fyndi smala-mann þóðar, Ld. 138; ok vildi eigi finna Hákon konung, Fms. x. 3. β. to visit; en þó gakk þú at finna konung, Nj. 7; veistu ef þú vin átt... far þú at finna opt, Hm. 120. 3. to find out, invent, discover; Þorsteinn er fann sumar-auka, Landn. 131, Ld. 12; Núi fann vin at góra, Ál. 64, Stj. 191; rúnar mund þú finna, Hm. 143; hann fann margar listir, þær sem áðr höfðu eigi fundnar verit, Edda (pref.) β. to discover a country; leita lands þess er Hrafn-Flóki hafði fundit, Fms. i. 238; þá er Ísland fannsk ok bygðisk, Landn. 24; þá rak vestr í haf ok fundu þar land mikit, 26; land þat er kallat er Grænaland fannsk ok bygðisk af Íslandi, Íb. 9; í þann tíma fannsk Ísland, Eg. 15. γ. metaph., finna e-n at e-u, a law phrase, to bring a charge home to one, Fms. xi. 75; hence also, vera fundinn að e-u, to be guilty of a thing; vera ekki at því fundinn, to be not guilty of a thing; cp. the Engl. to 'find' guilty.

II. metaph., 1. to find, perceive, notice, feel; þú fannst at ek lauss líf, Fm. 8; Gunnhildr finnr þat, Nj. 9; fundu þeir þá brátt, at þangat var skotið öllum málum, Eb. 330; hitki hann fiðr þótt þeir um hann fát lesi, Hm. 23; þá þat finnr er at þingi kemr, 24, 63; þeir fundu eigi fyrr en fjölmenni dreif at þeim, Fms. i. 136, Nj. 79. β. impers., fann þat á, it could be perceived, Eg. 51; fann þó mjök á Dofra, er þeir skildu, i. e. D. felt much at their parting, Fms. x. 175; fann lítt á honum, hvárt honum þótti vel eðr illa, it was little to be seen, whether... Eb. 42. γ. finna til, to feel hurt, feel a sore pang, is a freq. mod. phrase, but rarely occurs in old writers; finnr þú nökkut til hverr fjándskapr, etc., Anal. 175; en Aldrinn fann ekki til þessa sjálfr, áðr einn riddari tók brandinn af honum, þiðr. 358; hence til-finning, feeling.

2. to find, bring forward; finna e-t til, in support of a charge; ok finna þat til foráttu, at..., Nj. 15; hvat finnr þú helzt til þess, how dost thou make that out? 49; hann fann þó þat til, at..., Fms. vii. 258; Eyólfir fann þat til, at..., Nj. 244; hvat finnr þú til þess, what givest thou as the reason? Eb. 184; finna e-t við, to make objection to; hvártz hinn fiðr við, at hann sé eigi þar í þingi, Grág. i. 22; þá fundu þeir þat við, um gjaforð þetta, Fms. x. 87, v. l. 3. as a law phrase, to find money, to pay, lay out; hann skal eigi finna meira af fé því, en kaupla leg, Grág. i. 207; allra aura þeirra er úmaginn skal finna með sér, 206; ok slíka aura f. honum, ii. 210; á hann enga heimting til þess er hann fann við, Jb. 421 (MS.); ef maðr selr úmaga til framfærslu ok finnr fé með, Grág. i. 266; þeim þræli er hann hefir föla verðara fyrir fundit, 358; hence in the old oath, ek hefka fé bōdit í dúm þenna, hefka ek fundit, ok monka finna, hvárki til laga né úlaga (where bjōða and finna are opposed, i. e. bjōða to offer, finna to pay actually), 75; hence is derived the law phrase, at finna sjálfan sik fyrir, to pay with one's self, according to the law maxim, that 'he that cannot pay with his purse shall pay with his body,' used metaph. to pay dear, to feel sorely; kvæð mælikast at hann fyndi sik fyrir, Sturl. ii. 113, Eb. 154; skaltu sjálfan þik fyrir finna, Fms. iii. 110, xi. 256, Þorst. Síðu H. 9; the pun in Anal. 177 is a mere play of words.

4. finna at e-u, to censure, Fbr. 212, Edda (pref.), very freq. in mod. usage, hence að-finnsla and að-fyndni, censure; nearly akin is the phrase, þat eitt finn ek Gunnlaugi, at mér þykir hann vera úráðinn, that is the only fault I find with Gunnlaug, Ísl. ii. 217; ef nökkut væri þat er at mætti finna, if there was anything to blame, Sks. 69 new Ed.

II. in pl. for-lög, properly 'fore-law,' hence law or fate, destiny, cp. ör-lög and lög; the word is not very freq. in old writers, and chiefly occurs in Sagas such as Vd., Flám. S., in old poetry only in Km. 23, but rare in genuine heathen Sagas; the very word conveys some Christian notion; ör-lög and skíðe solely heathen, e. g. Hm. 55; this distinction is rightly marked in a story of Pal Vidalin—forlög koma ofan að ör-lög kringum sveima! álög þín ymsum stað | en ölog fæðast heima; in mod. usage forlög is current of ör-lög, skóp, obsolete; þetta mun vera forlög hennar, Glúm. 333; þú kvaðst þá heyrja vilja forlög sín... ef þú vilt vita forlög þín, Orkn. 10, Fs. 19; úhægt mun forlögin at flýja, 20; eigi mundi tjóa at brjóta að forlögnum, id.; ok mætti þit njóta lengri forlaga, that ye might eat a longer life, 84; honum var annarra forlaga auðit, 6; verðr hverr þín sínum forlögum at leita, 11; torsótt er at forðask forlögin, 24; ög ekki forðumst ill | fram kemr það hamingjan vill, Úlf. 3, 69; munst at hér sé hennar forlög (destiny), Fs. 141.

for-líkan, f. reconciliation (the Gr. καταλλαγή), Rom. v. 11.

for-líkast, að, dep. [cp. Germ. vergleichen], to come to terms, viii. 232: in mod. Icel. law, in all but criminal cases, the litigants to appear (in person or by delegates) before two or more 'peace-makers' or umpires called forlíkunar-menn,—usually the parson and more of the chief men of the parish; the office of the peace-maker try to bring about a friendly settlement called forlíkan, and this is often repeated; only after a forlíkan has been tried in vain the case be taken before a law-court; by this judicious proceeding than half the quarrels are nipped in the bud; there seems to be no like this in the old law, and the custom was probably borrowed from mark. There is a saying, 'a lean forlíkan is better than a fat law.'

FORRS, mod. foss, m., prob. akin to the preceding word and forr, [Swed.-Dan. foss; North. E. force; a test word of Scandinavian language and origin; cp. the curious passage in Constant. Porph. De Admin. Imperii, ch. 9, where the Byzantine author gives some names of waterfalls in Russia in two languages, ρωσιστί and σκαβινιστί (Russian and Slavonic), with a Greek translation; ρωσιστί, a waterfall, being called βορσ or φόρος (e. g. οὐλ-βορσ = Icel. Hólm-fors, βαρου-φόρος = Icel. Bárufors), whereas σκαβινιστί it is called πραχ, i. e. porog or prag: Constantine in another passage states that the Russians were Teutonic or 'Franks': the Garðar (Russia Minor) of that time was in fact a Scand. country; even the name Russia is by some (P. A. Munch) explained as Scand., afterwards adopted for the whole empire; it was still regarded so by the Byzantine authors of the 10th century, as opposed to Slavonic:—a 'force', waterfall, Landn. 291, 292; fors mikill er Sarpr heitir, Ó. Þorlaks-kver, p. 288, and Grett. ch. 68, 69, whence the name); Gull-f., Gold-force, a freq. name in western Icel. 2. a brook, stream; this sense is curious, and peculiar to the Stj. I Sam. xxx. 9; yfir fors Cedron, 527. 2 Sam. xv. 23; af fors drakk hann á götu, 656 C. 2: in the old poem Vsp. fors is evidently used in the same sense; á sér hón ausask augum fors, 31; falla forsar, 58. This idiom perhaps gives a hint as to the native place of this poem; falla forsum, to fall in torrents, Fas. ii. (in a verse). for-s-fall, n. a 'force-fall', torrent, Stj. 32, Ó. FORVE, n. an úr. ley in the eccl. law of the county Víkin or Bæjarþing, a coast district in the south of Norway, N. G. L. i. 339, 363, the law orders that a monster child (i. e. an abortion, a birth with human shape) shall be brought to a place 'forve', and buried neither man nor beast comes by; þat skal á forve (forve, v. l.) frúryra (put in a cairn) þar er hvárki gengr yfir menn né fénaðr, forve (forve, v. l.) hins illa. In N. G. L. i. 13 it is ordered that (e. g. traitors, murderers, self-murderers, etc.) were not to be buried on consecrated soil, but in the 'flood-mark' where sea and green turf cp. the curious story in Landn. 2. 19, where the Christian lady ordered herself to be buried between bigb and low water mark (i. e. for-máli), as she would not rest in heathen earth; so, on the other hand, a monster child must not rest in Christian earth. Thus forve is probably derived from fyrva, q. v., to ebb, and denotes the flood-mark or bigb, which the grave was to be dug; the concluding words, þar er forve illa, probably mean this place is the forve of the evil one, i. e. an unblessed place. The etymology given in H. E. i. 75 cannot be right.

FÖRN (fórnur, f. pl., Ver. 6), f. offering, [prob. a word of Lat. and eccl. origin, derived from Lat. offerre; after the introduction of Christianity the old heathen word blót (q. v.) became odious, as denoting heathen sacrifice, and is consequently never used in connection with Christian worship; its place being taken by the word förn];—a sacrifice in the Jewish sense, and in the Christian sense an offering to God; but it is scarcely ever used in a heathen sense—the passage Fær. 103 is quite peculiar: the phrase, fara förn, to bring an offering, Stj. passim; Guð mín sér sjá förn til handa, 131, passim; brenni-förn, a burnt offering; dreypí-förn, a drink offering; synda-förn, a sin offering, Bible, Vidal. passim; fórnar-blóð, n. the sacrificial blood, Stj. 305, 318; *fórnar- fórna, að, to offer, with acc. of the offering, dat. of the person; fórna mér reykelsi, Stj. 431; mörr er fórnaðr, 430. 1 Sam. ii. 16; þá hluti er hann vildi fórna, 410; fórna þik Guði, offer thee to God, 407: to offer as a present, Fms. ix. 450, Al. 96: in mod. usage, with dat. of the offering and the Deity, e. g. fórna Guði bænnum sínum. 2. the phrase, fórna höndum, to lift the hands to heaven as in prayer, or to wring the hands as in agony; that this phrase was also known to the ancients may be inferred from the compd, fórnar-hendr, f. pl. offering bands, uplifted bands, Magn. 514.

FRAKKA, u, f. [A.S. franca], a kind of spear; Grimm thinks that franca of Tacitus is merely a corruption of franca, a suggestion which seems to be almost certain; in northern poems and writers this word only occurs in Rm. 32, whence it was probably taken into Edda (Gl.); on the other hand, we have an Icel. frakki, a, m. a kind of weapon, in the compd frakki, a 'carrior-fluke,' i. e. the blade of a sword, Gisl. 7 (in a verse); akkeris-frakki, a, m. an 'anchor-fluke (?)', in a verse of 996, Fs. 92; in the frakka of the Rm. was probably borrowed from A. S.

FRAKKI, a, m. a proper name, cp. Gullþ.; Frakka-nes, n. a farm.
FRAKKAR, m. pl. the Franks, mod. the French; perhaps derived from northern weapon franca, as that of Saxons from seax=gladius; akland, n. the land of the Franks, as fixed by the peace of Verdun 843, lb. ch. 9 and Fms. i. ii, and in old poets (Hallfred):—in mod. usage used for France.

FRAKKI, a, m. [Fr. fraque], a frock, coat, mod. word, borrowed from Fr.

FRAKK, adj. [Engl. and Germ. frank], this word never occurs in old texts, and in mod. usage only in the sense impertinent, intrusive.

FRAM, adv.—the Icel. has a triple adverbial form, fram, denoting going to a place (ad locum); frammi, the being in a place (in loco); fram, the going from a place (a loco)—compar. framarr (mod. fram) or fremr, = Goth. framis; superl. framast (framarr) or framst: pronounced with a double m=frammi; and that such was the case is often times may be seen from Fms. vi. 385 and Skálda 168, 171. fram adv. with its compds and derivatives may be said to have been lost in Germ. as well as Engl., and at a very early time. Even Ulf. uses fram prep. in the sense of ámó, like the A. S. and Engl. from, Swed. från: in two passages Ulf. uses fram as adv., viz. Rom. xiii. 12, where he renders 'the night is far spent' (nóttin er um liðin of the Icel. N. T.) framis galeipn, which recalls to mind the Icel. fram-liðinn=deceased; and Mark i. 19, where πρὸβαλεῖν is rendered by gaggan framis el. ganga framarr or ganga fram; cp. also the Goth. compds framis=progress, Philipp. i. 25; fram-aldrs=stricken in years; fram-vigis el. fram-vegis; fram-vairþis=further: in O. H. G. fram=ultra still fram, but is now lost in Germ. as well as in Engl.: the Icel., on the other hand, makes a clear distinction between the prep. frá (from) and fram, forward, = Gr. πρὸς, Lat. porro, pro-: in some compds the sense of fram appears, e. g. framandi, a stranger, = Ulf. framabeis, prop. one who is off or from far off; so also fram-liðinn, gone, past; ganga fram, to die.

A. fram, forward, (opp. to aptr, backward); aðra leið aptr en fram, xxxii. 18; hann féll fram á fætr konungi, he fell forward on his at the king's feet, Eg. 92; stefna fram (to go on) hina neðri leið, brautin liggir þar fram í milli, id.; ef þeir vilja fram, or, fram á forward, Sks. 483; fram rétt, straight on, Fms. ii. 273, v. l.; fram, on, on! a war cry, O. II. fram is generally applied to any motion outwards or towards the open, opp. to inn, innar; thus fram denotes the outer point of ess, fram á nes; Icel. also say, fram á sjó, towards the big sea, (but fram or inn at land, landwards); also, towards the verge of a cliff or like, fram á hamarinn (bergit), Eg. 583: when used of a house fram means towards the door, thus, fara fram í dyr (eldhús), but inn or innar ðstofa (hence fram-bær), var hón ávalt borin fram ok innar, she was in a litter out and in, Bs. i. 343: of a bed or chair fram denotes outside, the side farthest from the wall, horfir hón til þils, en bóndi inn, she turned her face to the wall, but her husband away from it, 31.

Lat. dies Veneris, as in eccl. legends the Venus of the Lat. is usually rendered by Frēa (Freyja) of the Teutonic. This word is now obsolete in Icel. Frída is now called Föstudagr, vide fasta.

FRJÁLS, adj., dat. and gen. sing. fem. and gen. pl. frjálsi, frjálsa frjálsa in old writers, but mod. frjálsri, frjálsrar, frjálsra, inserting contracted form from frí-bals; Ulf. freibals; O. H. G. fríbals; the freols is prob. Scand., as it is not used in old poetry: frjáls the properly means 'free-necked,' a ring round the neck being a badge of servitude; but the Icel. uses the word frí only in the compound which is lost in Dan., though it remains in Swed. fríslé and úfríslé the mod. Dan. and Swed. frí is borrowed from the Germ. frei, and the Icel. frí:—Ulf. renders ἐλευθερία by freibals, but ἐλευθερος by frí—free, opp. to bondsman; frjáls er hverr er frelsi er gefit, N. informed; óljúgrfróð, Íb. 4; ú-fróðr, ignorant = Goth. unfroþs, h Ulf. uses to translate φρόνιμος, ἀνθρώπος; sögu-fróðr, skilled in old lore.

fróðr chiefly refers to historical knowledge, 'hinn Fróði' was an appellation given to the old Icel. chroniclers—Ari Fróði, Brandr Fróði, Sæmundr fróði, Kolskeggr Fróði, who lived between 1050 and 1150 A. D. But the fróðians of the next age were seldom called by this name: Odd Munk the end of the 12th century is only once called so, (Ing. S. fine); Snorri the 13th twice, viz. Ann. 1241 in a single MS., and Sturl. iii. 98, in a part of the Saga probably not written by Sturla himself; Sturla who died in 1284) is never called by that name; and the only real name of Stymir 'Fróði' (who died in 1245), though he least deserved the name. Of foreign writers the Icel. gave the name Fróði to Bede

(dn. pref.), whom they held in great honour.

FRÓMR, adj., akin to framr, prob. borrowed from Germ. fromm, Low fr. from; it seems to have come to Icel. with the Hanseatic trade at the end of the 15th century, and is found in the Rímur of that time, e. g.

Helga R. 3. 22; from Luther's Bible and the Reformation it became freq. in the sense of righteous, pious, with the notion of guile- frómt og meinlaus, and often occurs in the N. T. and hymns, e. g. Pass.

24. 9: it has however not been truly naturalized, except in the sense of honest, i. e. not thievish, and ófrómr, dishonest, thievish, (a euphemism); le-f., not slandering, speaking fair of other people. COMPS: fróme, a, m. guilelessness, Pass. 16. 8. fróm-lyndi, f. id.

FRÓN, n. a poet. word = land, country, Lex. Poët. passim; scarcely akin to Germ. fröbn = demesne; in mod. poets and in patriotic songs frón is the name for Icel. itself, Núm. x. 10, 8. 9, 12. 4. Snót 16; Icel. students in Copenhagen about 1763 were the first who used the word in this sense.

the first-fruits, Stj. 615. 2 Kings iv. 42: frums- or frumsa- is in Icel. and in Norse popular tales esp. used of animals that are first-born through two or more generations; such animals are thought to have a wonder-power, cp. Ivar Aasen; hence frumsa-kálf, m. a 'frumsa' calf; the word still represents the Gothic form frums, vide above. frumsa-frum

FRÚ, f., an older nom. sing. frauva, u, f., occurs Fms. x. 421, (Ágrip); frouva, Stj. 47; frou, id.; frú is prop. a later contracted form from frøyja, therefore the gen. in old writers is always frú (qs. frúvu); and the word is in the sing. indecl., thus, frú-innar, Fms. ix. 292; hann fékk frú Cecilíu, x. 3; móðir frú Ingigerðar, Landn. 240; frú Kristínar, Fms.

ix. 8; slíkrar frou (sic) sem ek em, Str. 40, 47: in mod. usage gen. frúar, if used by itself or put after one's name, but indecl. if put before it in addressing any one, thus, Frú Kristínar, but Kristínar frúar; the gen. frúar occurs Fas. iii. 586; in a MS. of the 15th century; pl. frúr, but older form fruvur or frovur, e. g. frovor, Edda (Arna-Magn.) i. 96 (Kb.); but

Ob. frúr, Hkr. i. 16: [frøyja was origin. fem. of freyr, and prop. meant

Lat. domina; Germ. frau; Dan. frue; no Goth. frayjō is found]:—a

e. g. biskups-frú, amtmanns-frú; wives of priests are not called so: again, húsfreyja is more homely, Germ. hausfrau, Engl. housewife, always of a married woman, vide e. g. the þjóðólfr (Icel. newspaper): in the 14th century in Icel. frú was used of abbesses and wives of knights, but was little used before the 13th century: af hennar (the goddess Freyja) nafni skyldi kalla allar konur tignar (noble woman), svá sem nú heita fruvor, Hkr. i. c.; af hennar nafni er þat tignar-nafn er ríkis-konur (women of rika (of a foreign lady in Wales), Nj. 280: again, good housewives, such as Berghthora in Njála, are called húsfreyjur, but never frúr; thus, kemsk of love, Lat. amores, Skáld-H. 5. 38, passim; and frygdugr, adj. amorous, Skáld-H. It is a bad word and quite out of use, and seems to have no connection with Germ. freude, which is a good Teut. word; the mod.

frukt, n. bumble compliments, and frukta, að, to make such compliments, in a bad sense, are perhaps akin, but they are slang words.

frýjan, f. = frýja, Fms. v. 55.

FRÝNN or FRÝNILIGR, adj.; this word is never used but as compounded with the prefix ú- (except Fas. ii. 351 in a bad and late Saga), viz. ú-frýnn or ú-frýniligr = frowning. The sense as well as the etymology of frýnn is somewhat dubious; there is the Germ. frôn or frohn or fran; but that word seems purely German and is by Grimm supposed to be qs. fro min = my lord (vide Hel.); neither does Icel. frýnn or Germ. frönu correspond properly as to the root vowel (cp. e. g. Germ. lobn = Icel. laun); on the other hand there is the Engl. frown, which in form answers to the simple frýnn, but in sense to the compd ú-frýnn; as no similar word is found in A. S. (nor in Germ. nor in Hel.), frown is most likely a Scand. word; and we suppose that the Icel. prefix syllable ú- is not in this instance = un-, that is to say, negative, but = of-, that is to say, intensive (= too, very, greatly); the original forms of frýnn, of-frýnn, of-frýniligr were contr. and assimilated into úfrýnn, úfrýniligr, meaning very frowning, and these compds then superseded the primitive simple word; this is confirmed by the freq. spelling in MSS. with 'of-', e. g. ofrynn, O. H. 144; all-ofrynn, Eg. Cod. Wolph.; heldr ofrynn, O. H. 167; but yet more freq. with 'ú-', e. g. Orkn. 440, Boll. 358, Fær. 50, Fms. i. 40, Fb. i. 73; the ekki frýnn, Fas. l. c., is again a variation of úfrýnn; the statement by Björn that frýnn is = bland, affable, is a mere guess by inference from the compd.

G. fríunt; Germ. freund; of all their meaning = Lat. amicus; whereas in the Scand. languages, Icel. as well as Swed. and Dan., it is only used in a metaph. sense; Dan. frænde; fründe]:—a kinsman; not a single instance is on record of the word having ever been used in another sense, unless an exception be made in the allit. phrase, sem frændr en eigi sem fjándr, in the old Gri. Grág. (Kb.) i. 170:—the same usage prevails in the oldest poem in Hm.,—deyr fé, deyrja frændr, 75; sumr er af sonum sáll sumr af frændum, 68; and Dags frændr, the kinsmen (great grandsons) of Dag, 72. This change in the sense of the word is very curious and characteristic of the Scandinavians, with whom the bonds of kinship and brotherhood were strong, and each family formed a kind of confederacy or fellowship equally bound in rights and in duties; cp. such phrases as, frændr þar, frændr-garðr: frændr often denotes kinsmen in a narrower sense = brother; yet sons and frændr are distinguished in Hm. 68; but generally frændr a collective word, Nj. 4; of a brother, Fs. 57; frændi, my son, Nj. 4, cp. FYRIR, prep., in the Editions spelt differently; in MSS. this word is usually abbreviated either f (i. e. firir), or f, fur, fvr (i. e. fyrir); in some MSS. it is idiomatically spelt with i, fir, e. g. Arna-Magn. 382 (Bs. i. 263 sqq.); and even in the old Miracle-book Arna-Magn. 645 (Bs. i. 333 sqq.), just as ifir is written for yfir (over); in a few MSS. it is written as a monosyllable fyr, e. g. D. I. i. 475, Mork. passim; in Kb. (Sæm-Edda) occurs fyr telia, Vsp. i. 1; fyr norðan, 36; fyr dyrum, Gm. 22; fyr vestan ver, Hkv. 2. 8; in other places as a dissyll. fyrir, e. g. Hm. 56, Gm. 54, Skm. 34, Ls. 15, Am. 64, Hkv. 2. 2, 19 (quoted from Bugge's edition, see his preface, p. xvi); fyr and fyrir stand to one another in the same relation as ept to eptir, und to undir, of (super) to yfir: this monosyllabic form is obsolete, save in the compds, where 'for' is more common than 'fyrir-'; in some cases both forms are used, e. g. for-dæming and fyrir-dæming; in others only one, but without any fixed rule: again, the forms fyr, fyre, or fire, which are often used in Edd., are just as wrong, as if one were to say epti, undi, yfi; yet this spelling is found now and then in MSS., as, fyte, Ó. H. (facsimile); fire, Grág. Sb. ii. 288 (also facsimile); the particles í and á are sometimes added, í fur, Fms. iv. 137; í fyrir, passim; á fur, Haustl. i. [Ulf. faur and faura: A. S. fore and for; Engl. for and fore; Germ. für and vor; Dan. for; Swed. för; Gr. πρὸ, παρά; Lat. pro, præ.]

X. denoting capacity, in the same sense as 'at', C. II, p. 27, col. 1; scarcely found in old writers (who use 'at'), but freq. in mod. usage, thus, eigi e-n f. vin, to have one for a friend, in old writers 'at vin'; hafa e-n f. fífl, fól, to make sport of one.

2. in old writers some phrases come near to this, e. g. vita f. vist, to know for certain, Dipl. i. 3; vita f. full sannindi, id., ii. 16; hafa f. satt, to take for sooth, believe, Nj. 135; koma f. eitt, to come (turn) all to one, Lv. 11, Nj. 91, Fms. i. 208; koma f. ekki, to come to naught, be of no avail, Ísl. ii. 215; fyrir hitt mun ganga, it will turn the other way, Nj. 93; fyrir hann er einskis örvænt orðs né verks, from him everything may be expected, Ísl. ii. 326; hafa e-s víti f. varnað, to have another's faults for warning, Sól. 19.

XI. joined with adverbs ending in -an, fyrir austan, vestan, sunnan, norðan, útan, innan, framan, handan, ofan, neðan, either with a following acc. denoting direction, thus, fyrir austan, sunnan... fjall, east, south of the fell, i. e. the eastern, southern side; fyrir neðan brú, below the bridge; fyrir út fjall = Lat. ultra; fyrir innan fjall = Lat. infra; fyrir handan á, beyond the river; fyrir innan garð, inside the yard; fyrir ofan garð, above, beyond the yard, etc.; vide these adverbs:—used adverb., fyrir sunnan, in south; fyrir vestan, in the west; fyrir norðan, in the north; fyrir austan, in the east;—current phrases in Icel. to mark the quarters of the count cp. the ditty in Esp. Árb. year 1530; but not freq. in old writers, who simply say, norðr, suðr..., cp. Kristni S. ch. 1: absol. and adverb., fyrir ofan, uppermost; fyrir handan, on the other side:—fyrir útan e-t, except, save, Anal. 98, Vkv. 8; fyrir fram, vide fram.

For- and fyrir-as prefixes, vide pp. 163-167 and below: fore-, for-, meaning before, above, in the widest sense, local, ten and metaph. furthering or the like, for-dyri, for-nes, for-elli, for-be etc.

β. before, down, for-brekkið, -bergis, -streymis, -vindis, -við etc. 2. in an intens. sense = before others, very, but not fre for-dyld, -göðr, -hagr, -hraustr, -kostuligr, -kuðr, -lítil, -ljótr, -pris, -ri-snjallr.

II. (cp. fyrir, acc., C. IX), in a neg. or priv. sense few words occur even in the earliest poems, laws, and writers, e. g. 1. að, -átta, -dæða, -nám, -næmi, -sending, -sköp, -verk, -veðja, -viða, -vi-ynja, -yrtrir; those words at least seem to be original and vernacular; a later time more words of the same kind crept in:

1. as early writers of the 13th and 14th centuries, e. g. for-boð, -bænir, -djarfa, -da (fyrir-dæma), -taka (fyrir-taka), -þóttir; fyrir-bjóða, -fara, -göra, -ko-kunna, -líta, -muna, -mæla, -vega, -verða.

2. introduced in the words at the time of the Reformation through Luther's Bible and German hymns, and still later in many more through Danish, e. g. for-brjóta, -d-láta, -líkast, -merkja, -nema, -sorga, -sóma, -standa, -svara, -þenusta, several others; many of these, however, are not truly naturalised, but chiefly used in eccl. writings:—it is curious that if the pronoun be placed after the verb (which is the vernacular use in Icel.) the sense is in many cases reversed; thus, fyrir-koma, to destroy, but koma e-u fyrir can mean to arrange; so also fyrir-mæla, to curse, and mæla fyrir, to say for; for-bænir, but biðja fyrir e-m, etc.; in the latter case the sense is good and positive, in the former bad and negative; this seems to be clearly that these compds are due to foreign influence.

G

G (gē) is the seventh letter. In the old Gothic Runic alphabet (Golden horn) it is represented by X, which was probably taken from the Greek X. The later common Runic alphabet had no g, and made the tennis k (ƿ, called Kaun) serve for both; still later, g was distinguished simply by a dot or stroke, ƿ or ƿ̇, and this character was called 'Stunginn Kaun', i. e. dotted or cut Kaun, just as the name of Stunginn Týr was given to cut or dotted t.

A. In Scandinavia the letter g begins many fewer words than in German or Saxon, mainly because the prefixed particle ge- is absent. In the fragments of Ulf., although so little is left, ga- is prefixed to about three hundred words, mostly verbs and nouns; in the Anglo-Saxon at least three or four thousand such words are recorded, and in modern German still more: indeed the number is so to say endless, as it can be put to almost any verb. In Icel. the only traces of this prefix are, I. in a few words retaining g before the liquids l and n (gl and gn): a.

gl in the word glíkr, similis (and derivatives); glíkr is now obsolete, and even in very old MSS. of the 13th or even the 12th century both forms, glíkr and líkr, glíkendi and líkendi, glíkjast and líkjast, occur indiscriminately; but in older poems gl is the only form. β. gn in gnadd, gnaga, gnauda, gnegg, gneisti, gnípa, gnista, gnolla, gnógr, gnúa, gnúpr, gnyðr, gnæðingr, gnöllra, gnöttra (q. v.), and some poet. words, as gnat, etc. But in mod. usage, in gn and gl, the g is dropped both in spelling and pronunciation, nadd, naga, nauda, hnegg, neisti, nípa . . . núpr, nyðr or níðr, næðingr, nöllra, nöttra; the gn in these words is almost constantly used in very old MSS., but even at the end of the 13th and in the 14th century the MSS., e. g. Hb., begin to drop the g, vide p. 206 sqq.: the exceptions are few, e. g. Icel. never say nyja for gnyja, but the word itself, although known, is almost obsolete; so also in modern writers gnótt and gnægtir (abundance) often occur: but the sound gn may be said to be almost extinct. The Danes, Swedes, and Norse still keep the g before n, e. g. Dan. gnaue, Swed. gnaga; whereas in glíkr the g has been dropped, and the word has become in Swed. lík, etc.; in Dan. lig, lige, ligning, etc. II. in two Icel. words the prefixed g has hardened into a radical consonant, so that its proper sound is no longer perceived, viz. granni (and compds), a neighbour, prop. one of the next house, Goth. garazna = γάρων, qs. g-ranni, from rann, domus; and greiða, explicare, = Goth. garaidian. The Scandinavian tongues have furthermore done away with the Saxon and German prefix to passive participles, and no trace of them remains even in the earliest writers or poems. The modern English has followed the same law as the Scandinavian in gn, for though it still appears in Engl. words (as gnaw, gnash), it is hardly sounded. The participial prefix remained long in southern England (see Morris's Specimens), but weakened into y or i till at last it dropped altogether.

B. PRONUNCIATION.—It is sounded hard, soft, or aspirate; hard, as in Engl. gate, gold; soft, as in Swed. dag, Germ. tag, or mod. Gr. γ, but lost in Engl.; aspirate also lost in Engl. I. hard, 1. as initial before a hard vowel, garðr, gull, gott, etc.; and before a consonant, gláðr, gráta; but the prefixed g, in the instances A. above, was prob. always sounded soft. 2. as final after consonants, as sorg, belg, ung, höfgr, or if double, as in egg. II. soft, never as initial (unlike mod. Greek, in which γ is sounded soft throughout), but only as final or sometimes as medial: 1. if single after a vowel, as dag, hug, log, veg, stig. 2. between two vowels if the latter is hard, lega, ligum, vega, vegum, dögum; but in case both the vowels, or even only the last, are soft (an i vowel) the g sound is lost, and it is eliminated altogether or assimilated to the preceding vowel, which thus becomes a diphthong; the same is the case if j follows g; thus syllables and words such as bagi and bæi, dagi and dæi, degi and deigi, eygia and eyja or eya, lagi and lægi or læi are all sounded alike; in olden times there must have been a difference of sound, as old MSS. never confound the spelling in words like those above, whereas in modern letters written by uneducated people, nothing is more frequent than to see, um dæinn for um daginn, or á definum for á deginum, and the like; the poets also rhyme accordingly, e. g. segi—hneigi, Pass. 38. 13; segja—deyja, 25; segja—beygja, 25. 12; drygja—nyja, 30. 3; eigið—dregið, 7. 10; deyja—teygja, 16. 13, etc.; even MSS. of the end of the 15th century frequently give seigja for segja (to say), e. g. Arna-Magn. 556 A, see the pref. to Ísl. ii. p. vi: as a medial, before d the g is sounded hard almost all over Icel., and the d soft (sagði); yet in the peninsula of Snæfells Sýsla many people still reverse this rule, and say sagdi, lagdi, bygdi, byggd, sounding the g soft but the d hard; in the east of Icel. people say bregða, sagði, pronouncing gð both soft; this is no doubt the best pronunciation, and accords well with the modern English said, taid, and the like. III. the aspirate g is sounded, 1. as initial before a soft vowel or j, gefa, gæta, geyma, geir, gjöld. 2. as final, a double g (gg) or g after a consonant is sounded as aspirate in all instances where a single g is lost (vide above), thus laggir, leggja, byggja, byggji, veggir, or margin, helgir, göfgr, engi, mergjar, elgjar, engja. Between two consonants the g is pronounced, thus fylgdi, morgna, fylgsni, bóligna are sounded as morna, fylni, bólnar.

C. SPELLING.—Here is little to notice: I. in old MSS. aspirate g as initial is frequently marked by the insertion of f after th thus giæta, giefa, = gæta, gefa, but this is not now used. J. in old Norse MSS.,—and, by way of imitation, in some Icel.,—the s before a vowel is frequently marked by inserting b after it, thus deggi, veggi, sagga; in the Middle Ages many foreign MSS. express sounds in this way, and so they wrote db = d, gb = soft g, tb = p, w comes the th in modern English; we also find gb in words u Helgi, Fb. pref.; probably the g was in olden times sounded soft lg, which agrees with the change in English into boly, sorrow, ngb = ng also occurs, e. g. erlinghi, Fb. i. 537, denoting a soft sound ng as in modern Danish and Swedish. In MSS. we now and then find spurious g before j and a vowel, e. g. deygja, meygja, for deyja, j because the sound was the same in both cases.

D. CHANGES.—The hard and aspirate g, especially as initial, u remains in modern foreign languages, gate, ghost, give, get, exc. Engl. yard, yarn (Icel. garð, garn), etc., where the Anglo-Saxon had g sound. Again, 1. the soft g after a vowel takes a vowel u and is in English marked by w, y, or the like, day, say, saw, law, way, low, = Icel. dag, segja, sög, lög, bogi, veg, lág, etc.: and e double g, as in lay, buy, = Icel. leggja or liggja, byggja. 2. s before or after a consonant, thus, Engl. said, rain, gain, sail, tail, fowl, etc., = Icel. sagði, regn, gagn, segl, tagl, hagl, fugl; Engl. follow, fellow, worry, borrow, belly, = Icel. sorg, fylgja, félagi, vargr, belgr. In Dan. lov, skov, vej answer to Icel. lög, skóg, veg, whereas S and Norway have kept the g, Swed. lag, skog, väg.

E. INTERCHANGE.—Lat. b and Gr. χ answer to Icel. and T but the instances of such interchange are few, e. g. Lat. hostis, lomo, bomo, boedus, heri, = Icel. gestr, garðr, gumi, geit, gær; Lat. bu χáos, cp. Icel. gjá, gina; Gr. χθής = gær; χῆν = gáss, χολή = gall, e.

I. a guest; the original meaning of this word is a alien, cp. Lat. bostis. B. the Guests, one division of the king's men; the Guests were a kind of policemen, and had not the full privileges of the king's guardsmen or hirmenn, although they were in the king's pay; they had their own seats in the king's hall, the guests' bench, gesta-bekkr, m., Fb. i. 347; their own chief, gesta-höfðingi, a, m., Nj. 7, Hkr. ii. 69, Fms. vii. 35; their own banner, gesta-merki, n., Fms. ix. 489; their own meeting, gesta-stefna, u, f., Fms. viii. 250; they formed a separate body, gesta-sveit, f., Fas. i. 318; skulu þar fylgja hirmenn ok gestir, O. H. 204, in the battle at Stiklastað: a guests' hall, gesta-skáli, a, m., is mentioned in Eg. 28, Fas. ii. 93: a ship, gesta-skip (gesta-fley), n., Fms. viii. 139; cp. the Sagas passim, esp. the Konunga Sögur, Fms. x. 147, Hkr. passim, but esp. N. G. L. in the section Hirds-skrá, or the law (rules) for the king's men, and Sks. 257 sqq. As the gestir were lower in rank than the hirmenn, a recruit had often to serve his apprenticeship among them, e. g. var hann í gesta-sæti, he was seated among the guests, i. e. was held in small repute, Fas. i. 51.

II. a stranger, guest, Lat. hospes, but keeping the old notion of a stranger, prop. an accidental guest, chance comer, and is distinguished from bost-maðr, an invited guest, or the like; hence the allit. phrase, gestr ok gangandi, a guest and ganger, since with the ancients the poor had to go from house to house (cp. gangleri); this is to be borne in mind, if one would understand old sayings such as, Guð elr gesti, God feeds guests, Bs. i. 247; or many passages in the old heathen poem Háva-mál, e. g. örir gestr við gest, guest quarrels with guest, Hm. 31; gestr at gest hæðinn, guest mocking guest, 30, which reminds one of Hom. Od. xviii. 1-33; gest þú né geyja né á grind hreikir (scoff not at a guest, nor drive him to the door), get þú váluðum vel, Hm. 136, where gestr (a guest) and válaðr (a vagrant) are used synonymously; ganga skal, skala gestr vera æ í einum stað, 34. In olden times there were no public hosteleries, and all entertainment was (as it still is in Icel.) private bounty; a fine instance of a munificent hostess of the heathen age is recorded in Landn.—Geirríðr sparði ekki mat við menn, ok lét göra skála sinn of þjóðbraut þvera, hón sat á stóli ok laðaði úti gesti, en bórð stóð inni jafnan ok matr á, 2. 13. After the introduction of Christianity, when churches were built and endowments given, the donors often imposed the duty of 'feeding guest and ganger for a night' (ala gesti ok ganganda), Dipl. i. 169, 174; or, þar er ekki gesta eldi skylt (it is not required to feed guests), ala hvern at ósekju er vill, 200; ala þurfa-menn ok þá er fara skylda-erinda, 201, cp. 273 passim:—gener. a visitor, guest: gesta-eldi, n. shelter for guests, D. I. (vide above): gesta-fluga, u, f. a guest-fly, a moth, Isl. þjóðs. i. 558: gesta-herbergi, n. a 'guest-barbour,' hostel, inn, Gr. karaláma, Luke ii. 7: gesta-hús, n. a guest-room, Sturl. i. 216, ii. 191: gesta-koma, u, f., gesta-naud, n. a coming, crowding of guests: gesta-maðr, m. a guest-man (bishops had a special servant so called), Bs. i. 850, 876: gesta-rúm, n. a guest-bed: gesta-skáli, a, m. a guest-chamber, Hom. 36: gesta-spjót, n. pl., a cat is said to raise the 'guest-spears' when it lies on its back and cleans itself with its hind legs, which is a token that a stranger is at hand, Isl. þjóðs. i. 558.

III. as pr. names, Landn., freq.; also in compds, Þor-gestr, Heim-gestr, Goð-gestr, Hleva-gastir on the Golden horn (Bugge's reading), and Gr. Ξενο-φών, Ξενο-φάνης. Gestr is a name of Odin=the Traveller, Edda, Vfm., Gm., Hervar. S. ch. 15 (Gestum-blindi). It is curious to notice that whereas with the Romans bostis came to mean a foe, with the Teutons (as with the Gr. ξένος) the equivalent word became a term of friendship, used of a friend staying at one's house.

gest-risinn, adj. hospitable, Greg. 32, Bs. i. 101, i Tim. iii. 2, Tit. i. 8, i Pet. iv. 9, passim.

gest-rismi, f. hospitality, 655 v. 2, Bs. i. 81, 830, Rom. xii. 13, Heb. xiii. 2, passim.

gest-vænliga, adv. hospitably, Vápn. 23, (prob. a false reading.)

GETA, pret. gat, 2nd pers. gatz, pl. gátu; pres. get; pret. subj. gæti; sup. getið, but getað in the mod. sense of could; part. getinn; reflex. pres. and pret. getsk or gezk, gatsk or gatzk, mod. gezst and gatzst; with the neg. suff. gátu-ð, Korm. 224, Sighvat; gat-at, Lex. Poët.

WITH ACC.

Å. [Ulf. begitan=εὐρίσκειν; A. S. getan; Engl. get; O. H. G. gezan]:—to get; this use of the word, which is so common in Engl., is dying out in Icel.; it is found in the old poems, esp. in the old Hm.; it is used in law phrases, but is rare in common prose, even in the oldest Sagas; geta þögn, to get silence, a bearing, Höfuðl. 3, Hm. 8; geta orðstír, to get fame; en orðstír deyr aldrið heim sér góðan getr; 75; orðstír of gat, Eirekr at þat, Höfuðl.; ey getr kvíkr kú, Hm. 69; sjaldan liggjandi úlfir lær um getr, né sofandi maðr sigr, 57; ef hann sylg um getr, 17; né þat máttu ... geta hvergi, they could nowhere get it, Hým. 4; gambantein at geta, gambantein ek gat, Skm. 34; hvar gatzú vára aura, Vkv. 12; geta gjaforð, to marry, Alm. 6: geta sér, to get for oneself; hættr er heimis-kviðr nema sér góðan geti, Sdm. 25; sú er sæll er sér um getr lof ok líknstafi, Hm. 8; er sér getr slíkan sefa, Hkm. 19; góðs um gesti, ef sér geta mætti, if he could get it, Hm. 4; geta gjöld, laun e-s, 64, 124, Gm. 3; geta gott af e-m, to get good of one, Hm. 43, 44:—in law, nema hann geti þann, at .... unless he can get that verdict, that ...., Grág. i. 17; goðinn seksk ef

III. joined to an infinitive, a participle, or a supine, to get to do (fá, q. v.), is used in a similar sense,—hence to be able: 1. almost like an auxil. verb, α. with infin. but without 'at'; ek gat'k unna Gunnari, I got to love G., Ög. 21; en sá gat taka við syndum, Sl. 6; ek gat líta, I got to see, bebold, Korm. 14 (in a verse); ek gat blóta, Hallfred (Fs. 94); getum hræra, we do rear, Edda; geta sjá, to get to see, Hkr. i. 205 (in a verse); hann gat teygja at sér, he did draw to himself, Edda 65 (in a verse); geta fæða, to give birth to, Am. 103; ef hann eignask getr, Hm. 78; hveim er eiga getr, Hkv. H. 85; eigi at heldr gat hann veitt þann íkorna, id.; ef ek get eigi fylgt yðr, Fms. vi. 211.

2. absol. in old writers geta seems never to occur in the sense of to be able, but only periphrastically as above; but in mod. usage geta has almost displaced the old verb kunna in this sense, e. g. eg get það ekki, I cannot; getr-þú komið, canst thou come? ef hann hefði getað, if he could have; gekki þurfti, eg gat, I could, and endless other instances.

Foreign is often use geysir as an appellation; but the only Icel. words for hot is are hver (a cauldron, hot well) and laug (a hot bath). The geysir is never mentioned in old writers, and it seems from a record in Icel. Annals that the great hot wells in the neighbourhood of Hauka-ver due to the volcanic eruptions of 1294, when old hot springs is ceased and those now existing came up,—hjá Haukadál kómu upp stórir en sumir hurfu þeir er áðr höfðu verit; unfortunately the nef Anna S. (the bishop), the sole historical work of that time, is lost. Þorvord geysir = a gusher must be old, as the inflexive -ir is hardly used in obsolete words (læknir a leach, hellir a cave, etc., are exceptional); v probably borrowed from some older hot spring. A pretty legend, ing to the 'moving' of springs when defiled with innocent blood, is ed in Ísl. Þjóðs. ii. 112, 113; this tale could not have sprung up ed a change in the place of the hot springs had been observed.

glan, f. gluttony, Róm. 306, (an ἀπ. λεγ.)

(-or -ki after t or s), a particle suffixed to nouns and adverbs.

A. In a positive sense [Lat. -que], ever, Lat. -que, -cunque: 1. with onoun hverr (quie) through all cases, answering to the Lat. quis-que: the Laws we can nearly make a full paradigm:—nom. hverr-gi or vi, Lat. quis-que, qui-cunque, Grág. Kb. i. 61 (twice): gen. hvers-ki (cujus-que), 238: dat. n-gi (cui-que), 31, 156: acc. masc. hvern-gi (quem-que), 147, 155, 125, 245, ii. 47, 66: abl. hve-gi or hví-gi, however, i. 147, 195, ii. 41, 128, 151, Jómásv. 14:—plur. acc. neut. hver-gi (quae-que): dual atg, hvárung-gi meigin, on both sides (of a river), Grág. Kb. ii. 93:—in historical prose, því at hit næsta sumar gat hvergi ber á Íslandi, flowing summer every man gathered berries in Iceland (to make some of wine), Bs. i. 135, (or are we to read hvar-gi, everywhere?). 2. in adverbs; hvert-ki (quocum-que módo), Grág. i. 50; nær-gi, when-ubi-cunque), i. 191; hvar-gi, wherever; 25, 166, 240, ii. 128, 212. 3. In a negative sense, with a few pronouns, adjectives, adverbs, rely in old poems with substantives: 1. with nouns, in the pr. Lopt-ki, an ἀπ. λεγ., Ls. 19: with appellatives, þórf-gi, no need, an 7, Hkv. Hjörv. 39; freq. in mann-gi, no man, cp. Lat. nemo, Íb., which is even used in mod. writers and poets; væt-ki, naught; vettu-gi (dat.) and vetter-gis (gen.), Vsp.: with adjectives, ein-gi (q. v.), none, a common word; otherwise rare, sjálf-gi, 'self-not,' i. e. not oneself, Ls. 29, an ἀπ. λεγ.: with a dat. case of langr, þá löngu-gi, then not for a long time, Konr. (MS.): with pronouns, in the dual, hvárr-gi, neither, Lat. neuter, Grág. Kb. i. 46, ii. 93, 151; gen. hvárrs-kis (neutrius), freq.; dat. hvárung-gi (neutri), i. 215; hvárung-gi, ii. 63: neut. hváru-gi, 216; hitt-ki, ne illud quidem, Hm. 21, 23; þat-ki, Hbl. 6: þat-ki at ek fú (not even that I get) mála minn falslausan, Mork. 83. 2. with adverbs, only in poetry or laws or very old prose; svá-gi, not so, Grág. Kb. ii. 99, Mork. 83; þá-gi, then not; þey-gi, though not, qs. þó-gi; æva-gi, never: again, hver-gi (q. v.), nowhere; ei-gi (q. v.), not; aldri-gi (q. v.), never; hvár-ki (q. v.), neither, are common words in prose and in speech. The negative -gi can never be suffixed to verbs (vide 'at,' p. 2); therefore byð-gi, non jubeo (in Íslands-vaka 61, a poem of the last century, Fól. i. 236), is a spurious imitation of the old idiom; neither can -at be put to nouns; ráð-at hann kunni, Jónas 105, ought therefore to be ráð hann kunni-t, issue he knew not.

C. In an indefinite sense; in a few instances -gi seems to be used almost like Latin quidem with a preceding negative; eigi miklo-gi minna, ne multo quidem minus, Heiðar. S., Ísl. ii. 360; eigi stóru-gi meiri, ne multo quidem majora, 386; engi miklo-gi görr..., nemo multo quidem plus..., Grág. i. 209; cp. also the adverbs öllum-gis or öðlun-gis, quite, altogether (allr, -gi); einun-gis, only, solely (einn, -gi), both formed from dat. sing.: the obsolete vel-gi (qs. vel-gi) is ambiguous, being used both in a neg. sense = not well, and posit. = well, bene quidem, cp. Bs. i. 393, note; Hm. 66, málun-gi, is doubtful;—prob. þyrftig-at málun-gi mat should be read, -at being taken not as a prep. but as a negative verbal suffix, and -gi as a positive suffix; Icel. now say, hann á ekki málungi matar, he does not know where to look for his next meal.

The negative -gi is peculiar to Scandin., and no traces of it are found in any Saxon nor German idioms; whereas, as a positive suffix, it is common to all Teutonic tongues, and remains in the Engl. many and any; 'many' being qs. man-y = man-ever, 'bomo-cunque,' Goth. manags, and 'any' qs. an-y = every-one; so also is the g in Icel. margr and hvárrgr, which are remnants—the former of the positive, the latter of the negative -gi.

GIL, n., gen. pl. gilja, dat. giljum, [Gbyll or Gill in North. E. and Scot. local names]:—a deep narrow glen with a stream at bottom, like the Gr. χαράδρα; brooks and tributary streams flowing through clefts in the fell side to the main river at the bottom of a vale are in Icel. called gil; very freq. in local names, Ísfríðingá-gil, Branda-gil, Hauka-gil, Hrafná-gil, Hellra-gil, Gilj-á, þver-gil, vide Landn.; (a chasm without water or with stagnant water is not gil, but gjá; also gljúfr, a deep chasm forming the bed of a river), Valla L. 223, Hrafn. 7, Eg. 766, Ld. 218, Krók. 64, Fms. vii. 149, passim. COMPS: Gils-bakki, a, m., prop. Gill-bank, a local name, Landn., whence Gils-bekkingar, m. pl. the name of a family, Landn. gils-botn, m. a gill bottom, Sturl. i. 82, 84. gils-gjá, f. a chasm with a gill (rare), Grett. 111. gils-þróm, f. the edge of a gill, Ld. 218, Dropl. 23, Grett. 111.

gilda, t, to be worth so and so, only in mod. usage, esp. in metaph. and impers. phrases, mig gildir einu, I do not mind; láttu þig einu g., never mind: hvað sem gildir, at any price; hirt aldrei hvað sem gildir, at hætt á ósatt mál, Pass. 13, 2.

GILDI, n. [gjalda; Ulf. gild = tribute, Luke xx. 22, Mark xii. 14; A. S. gild; Hel. geld; Frank. chalta; Germ. geld = money; it remains in Old Engl. weregild]:—payment, tribute; this sense is very rare, as gjal (q. v.) is the common word; chiefly used in compds, as nef-gildi, head-tax; baug-gildi, q. v.; skatt-gildi, a tax; skulda-gildi, payment of debts, Grág. i. 302. 2. recompense; in the saying, æ sér til gildis gjöf (mod. æ sér gjöf til gjalda), Hom. 146. 3. value; al-gildi, full-g., half-g., whole, full, half-value; ið-gildi or í-gildi, equivalence; hón er karlmanns-ígildi. Þ. worth, value, esteem; the phrase, vera í miklu, litlu, engu gildi, to be in great, small, no repute; án Drottins réða er aðstoð manns í engu minsta gildi.

Pass. 9, 2: freq. in mod. usage, but rare in old writers, þegar er komizt í gildi við höfðingja eðr kærleika, Finnb. 266. II. a banquet, feast, [cp. Dan. gilde; so called from the fee paid?], Eg. 20 sqq., Edda 45, 57, Fb. i. 283, Gpl. 178, freq. in old poems; the poetical mead is called Gauta g., Kormak; or gildi Grjótdaldr, the cheer of the Giants; gefa úlfum gildi, to feast the wolves, Lex. Poët.; to this seems to belong the passage in Vsp. 27, hvárt skyldi Æsir afrað gjalda eðr skyldi goðin öll gildi eiga, where the eiga gildi means to hold a feast, with the notion of making a league or peaceful agreement, as opp. to gjalda afrað (q. v.), to pay tribute as a badge of submission.

III. in a technical sense, a guild, throughout England and Scandinavia during the Middle Ages; the first guilds in Norway were instituted by king Olave (1066–1093), Ólafur konungr lét setja Mikla-gildi í Niðarósi, ok mörg önnur í kaupstöðum, en áðr vóru hvirfings-drykkjur (but before there were drinking-bouts), Fms. vi. 440: the guilds were secular brotherhoods or trades-unions (and often became political clubs); they assumed the names of saints or sacred things, as Kross-g., Cross-guild; Ólaf's-g., St. Olave's guild (in Norway); Knúts-g., St. Canute's guild (in Denmark), and so on: in Icel. this sense rarely occurs, mælti at einhverri vildis-manna ætti at hefja gildit, Sturl. i. 20; ok var gildit at Ólafs messu hvert sumar, 23; cp. also gildis-fundur, m. a guild-meeting, mentioned in Sturl. i. 58; and gildis-bændr, m. pl. guild-franklins, guild-brothers, 23, (about the middle of the 12th century); but guilds never took root in Icel.: gildiskáli, a, m. a guild-ball, Fms. viii. 160, ix. 22, D.N. passim: gildistíð, n. a guild-term, Fms. viii. 151.

gildingr, m. a thing rated at its full worth, fully measured, Grág. ii. 357, 380: pride, pretension, án gildings, 655 xxvii. 2.

gildir, m., in poetry a payer, contributor, Lex. Poët.: a feaster, poet. the wolf that feasts in blood: a guild-brother, öld Ólafs gilda (gen. pl.), the host of St. Olave's guild-brothers, Geisli 10; Hropts gildar, the champions of Odin, Hd.

gild-leikli, a, m. strength, full size, Gret. 148: mod. stoutness.

gild-liga, adv. stoutly, metaph. with a grand air, Korm. 60.

gildna, að, to become stout.

GILDR, adj., neut. gilt, [cp. gildi, gjalda; Swed., Dan., and Norse gild]:—of full worth, full:

I. a trade term, of full measure, size, quality, and the like; gillt fé, Grág. i. 503; gildir skal tréskjöldur, ef, Gpl. 105, cp. 104; bolóxar gildar, N.G.L. i. 126; þeim manni er bæði hefir gildar (full-measured) álnar ok faðma, Grág. ii. 262; gild dagleioð, Bs. ii.

2. valued at, with dat., gildir tveim mörkum, Grág. ii. 86; g. átt aurum, id.; svá gildir, id.; hversu þau sár eru gild, at bow much those wounds are rated, N.G.L. i. 172; tvi-gildir, hálf-g., al-g., of double, half, full worth.

II. metaph. complete, absolute, great; g. konungr, Fms. ix. 69; g. höfðingi, xi. 18; gild húsreyja, Glúm. 349; gildir maðr, Eg. 182; flestir enir gildari menn (honorary), Ld. 106; Hallfreðr var þá sem gildastr, H. was then at his best, Fs. 100; á gildasta aldri, id., Stj. 230: so of things, honum var þat gildir þykkir, a great shock, Ísl. ii. 321; með gildum sóma, with great fame, Fms. xi. 18; gild hefn, Ísl. ii. 116; gild ferð, a famous journey, Fs. ii. 513.

III. in mod. usage, stout, brawny, cp. Gret. 148; Icel. now say gildir of a man, digr of things; but in compds, mittis-digr, not mittis-gildir; to use digr and digrask (q.v.) for gildir and gildna is now thought rude; but in olden times only digr was used in that sense, e.g. Ólafr Digri, Þorbjörg Digra (a lady); the passage referred to, Gret. 148, comes near the mod. sense of that word, but is not to be so understood.

GILDRA, u, f. a trap, Gpl. 445, Niðrst. 3; sem melrakki í gildru, 4; vide knatt-gildra: gildru-merki, n. a trap mark, Gpl. 444: metaph., Fms. i. 221, ii. 48, vi. 145, Mar. 506.

gildra, að, to trap, Gpl. 444: metaph. to contrive, g. til e-s, ef maðr gildir til þess at vápn skuli sjálf falla á menn, Grág. ii. 117, Fms. ii. 294, vii. 202; g. til veiða, viii. 63, 80; g. svá til, at ..., to contrive so, that ..., Stj. 451, Þidr. 242, Róm. 257.

gildri, n. the laying a trap, N.G.L. i. 341, 379.

gildri, n. = gildi, [Ulf. gilst, Rom. xiii. 6; O.H.G. gelstar], payment, Grág. Kb. ii. 204.

gilja, að, [Ulf. gailjan = εὐπαίειν; Swed. gilja], to beguile a woman, Gret. 161, Krók. 64 (a pun), Bs. i. 238.

Gilli, a, m. [Gael. gillie = a servant], only in Irish pr. names, Fms., Landn. gil-maðr, m. a libertine, Blanda.

GIM, n. [in A.S. gim is masc., and so it seems to be used in Vkv. 5; A.S. gim from Lat. gemma]:—in poetry a gem, a jewel; the sun is called fagr-gim, the fair gem; gims gerðr, a lady, Lex. Poët. 2. in poets metaph. fire, Edda (Gl.): never used in prose.

Gimli, a heavenly abode, sal sá hón standa sólu fegra gulli þakðan á Gimli, Vsp. 63; it occurs only there, whence it came into Edda 12; even the gender is uncertain, whether n. or perhaps better dat. of a masc. gimill = himill = himin, n. heaven.

GLER, n. [A. S. glæs; Engl. glass; Germ. glass; early Dan. glar; the mod. Dan. and Swed. glas seem to be borrowed from Germ.; Icel. distinguish between gler (glass) and glas (a small glass bottle); but s seems to be the original consonant, and the word is akin to Glasiir, glys, glæsa, q. v.]:—the word originally meant amber, 'succinum' quod ipsi (viz. the Germans) glæsum vocant, Tacit. Germ. ch. 45; glass beads for ornament are of early use; quantities are found in the great deposits (in cairns and fens) of the earliest Iron Age, but only in a single instance in a deposit of the Brass Age (which ends about the beginning of our era), vide Ann. for Nord. Oldk. 1868, p. 118; and such is the sense of the word in the three places that it occurs in old heathen poems: magical Runes were written on glass, Sdm. 17: metaph., nú er grjótt þat at gleri orðit, now those stones are turned into gler, of an altar 'glassed' with sacrificial blood, Hdl. 5; cp. also the curious reading, brestra í gleri, to be shivered, to break into shivers, Hým. 29,—the reading of Kb., 'í tva', is a gloss on the obsolete phrase:—glas also occurs twice or thrice in A. S. poetry, but not in the oldest, as Beowulf, vide Grein. For window-panes glass is of much later date, and came into use with the building of cathedrals: a Danish cathedral with glass panes is mentioned in Knyttl. S. ch. 58 (year 1085); in Icel. the first panes brought into the country were probably those presented by bishop Paul to the cathedral at Skalholt in the year 1195; the ancient halls and dwellings had no windows in the walls, but were lighted by louvres and by round openings (gluggar) in the roof, covered with the caul (of a new-born calf, called skjall or líkna-belgr) stretched on a frame or a hoop and called skjár: these are still used in Icel. farms; and Icel. distinguish between the round small cauld windows (skjár or skjár-gluggar) and glass windows (glér-gluggar):—háll sem glér, slippery as glass, of ice, Nj. 144: in eccl. and later writings, Hom. 127, Sks. 424, Vm. 21, Fas. iii. 393: in the saying, sjaldan brýtr gæfu-maðr glér. GLÍMA, u. f. [this word occurs neither in Germ. nor in Saxon, nor in the mod. Scand. tongues (of Sweden, Norway, and Denmark), the origin is not known]:—wrestling, a favourite national sport with the Icel. people, in old as well as in modern times, answering to the Glím; glímu-brögð, n. pl. wrestling-tricks, vide brögð II. 2: to the technical terms there mentioned, add, hnykkir, hælkrókr, sveifla, etc.: glímu-félagi, a, m. a wrestling-match, Háv. 41: glímu-færr, adj. bodied as a wrestler, Finn. 328: glímu-galdr, m. a 'wrestler', to charm one's legs and make them steady, Ísl. þjóðs. i: glímu-dr, m. a wrestler: glímumann-liga, adv. like a good wrestler, nimbly, Ísl. 502: glímu-völlr, m. the wrestling-ring. The earliest match recorded is that of Thor and the giantess Elli (Age),—for the tale vide Eg. 33; freq. in the Sagas, Sturl. iii. 20, 268; glenz ok glímur, Fms. i. 9 sqq., 182, iii. 187, 188, Grett. and Finn. b., Kjalm. passim, Eg. ch. 14: leikr (sport) and glíma are often used synonymously, as Ld. ch. 14.

The glíma was a popular game at any meeting or festival, where many young and active men met together: thus at the banquet in Ríkshóli (1119) the guests amused themselves by dancing, glímur, and story-telling, Sturl. i. 23; at the parliament (alþing) there was a glíma, Fanga-brekkja ('wrestling-brink') in Glíum. ch. 13 a fight is recorded between the Northerners and Westerners assembled there; as in Grett. ch. 75 (in the parliament at Hegrans); in Gunnl. ch. 11 the crew of the ships in harbour made up a glíma. The mod. Icel. glíma-glíma is just the same, as it was practiced in the college at Hólar, later in the school at Bessastaðir, as also at fishing-stations and wherever young men came together; the young men are divided by lot into parties, which are then drawn up in a row, each having their leader glímubóndi (whence the name); the bændr pair off their men against one another to wrestle in the arena or defile between the two ranks, one after another; if the one side was weaker in number, or the one bóndi had lost all his men, he might challenge his antagonist, and their match decided the game, Eggert Itin. ch. 518. The bændra-glíma at college and school was by far the best-played, and much stress was laid on nimble and graceful movements. Glíma in Hom. 24 scurrilitas is rendered by glíma.

GOD, n. pl. [all the Teutonic languages have this word in common; Ulf. gupa, n. pl., Gal. iv. 8; guda, id., John x. 34, 35; and Gup, m.; A.S. godu, n. pl., and God, m.; O.H.G. Cot: in mod. languages masc.; Engl. God; Germ. Gott; Dan.-Swed. Gud].

A. HISTORICAL REMARKS.—In heathen times this word was neuter, and was used almost exclusively in plur., as were also other words denoting Godhead, e.g. regin or rögn = numina, q. v.; and bönd, höpt, prop. = bonds, and metaph. gods:—this plur. usage seems not to refer to a plurality of gods, but rather, as the Hebrew אלהים, to the majesty and mystery of the Godhead; it points to an earlier and purer faith than that which was current in the later ages of the Scandinavian heathendom; thus the old religious poem Völuspá distinguishes a twofold order of gods,—the heavenly powers (regin or ginn-heilög goð) who had no special names or attributes, and who ruled the world, like the Moipa or Aiða of Gr. mythology;—and the common gods who were divided into two tribes, Æsir (Ases) and Vanir, whose conflict and league are recorded in Vsp. 27, 28, and Edda 47.

II. after the introduction of Christianity, the masculine gender (as in Greek and Latin) superseded the neuter in all Teutonic languages, first in Gothic, then in Old High German and Anglo-Saxon, and lastly in the Scandinavian languages; but neither in Gothic nor in Icel. did the word ever take the masc. inflexive r or s, so that it remains almost unique in form.

2. in Scandinavian the root vowel was altered from o to u (goð to gud), [Swed.-Dan. gud], yet in old poems of the Christian age it is still made to rhyme with o, Gods, boðnum; Goð, roðnar, Sighvat; as also in the oldest MSS. of the 12th century; sometimes however it is written gþ, in which case the root vowel cannot be discerned. 3. in Icel. the pronunciation also underwent a change, and the g in Guð (God) is now pronounced gv (Gwud), both in the single word and in those proper names which have become Christian, e.g. Guðmundr pronounced Gwudmundr, whence the abbreviated form Gvendr or Gvöndr. The old form with o is still retained in obsolete words, as goði, goðorð, vide below, and in local names from the heathen age, as Goð-dalir; so also Gormr (q. v.), which is contracted from Goð-ormr not Guð-ormr. On the other hand, the Saxon and German have kept the root vowel o.

III. in old poems of heathen times it was almost always used without the article; gremdu eigi goð at þér, LS.; áðr vér heilög goð blótum, Fas. i. (in a verse); ginnheilög Goð, Vsp. passim; goðum ek þat þakka, Am. 53; með goðum, Alm.; in prose, en goð hefna eigi alls þegar, Nj. 132.

2. with the article goð-in, Vsp. 27: freq. in prose, um hvat reiddusk goðin þá er hér brann hraunir er nú stöndu vér á, Bs. i. (Kr. S.) 22; eigi eru undr at goðin reiðisk tölum slíkum, id.; Hallfreðr lastaði eigi goðin, þó aðrir menn hallmælti þeim, Fms. ii. 52; allmikin hug legger þú á goðin, Fs. 94; eigi munu goðin þessu valda, Nj. 132, passim.

3. very seldom in sing., and only if applied to a single goddess or the like, as Öndor-goðs (gen.), Haustl. 7; Vana-goð, of Freyja, Edda; enu skirleita goði, of the Sun, Gm. 39.

IV. after the introduction of Christianity, the neut. was only used of false gods in sing. as well as in pl., Sólar-goð = Apollo, Orrostu-goð = Mars, Drauma-goð = Morpheus, Bret. (Verel.); and was held up for execration by the missionaries; gör þik eigi svá djarfa, at þú kallar goð hinn hæsta konung er ek trú á, Fb. i. 371. Yet so strongly did the neut. gender cleave to the popular mind that it remains (Grág. Kb. i. 192) in the oath formula, goð gramt = God gramr; and Icel. still say, i Guðanna (pl.) bænnum. 2. guðir, masc. pl., as in A. S. gudas, is freq. in eccl. writers, but borrowed from the eccl. Lat.

(App.) 126* new Ed. (from the Hauks-bók), that men of the olden time used to call their sons and daughters after the gods (Goð-, Þór-, Frey-, Ás-); and it was thought that a double (i. e. a compound) name gave luck and long life, esp. those compounded with the names of gods; menn höfðu mjök þá tvau nöfn, þótti þat líkast til langlífis ok heilla, þótt nokkurir fyrirmælti þeim við goðin, þá mundi þat ekki saka, ef þeir ætti eitt nafn, though any one cursed them by the gods it would not hurt if they had 'one' name, i. e. if they were the namesakes of the gods, Eb. l. c.:—we read 'eitt nafn' for 'eitt annat nafn' of the Ed. and MS. In Fb. i. 23, the mythical king Raum is said to have had three sons, Alf, Björn, and Brand; the first was reared by the Finns, and called Finn-Alf; Björn by his mother (a giantess), and called Jötun-Björn; and Brand was given to the gods, and called Goð-Brand (Guð-brandr, whence Guðbrands-dalir, a county in Norway); cp. also Eb. ch. 7.

H. glossaries, prob. meaning the same; and the form gupi twice occurs in Danish-Runic stones in Nura-gupi and Saulva-gupi, explained as goði P. G. Thorsen, Danske Runem.; (Rafn's explanation and reading Nura-gupi qs. norðr á Gauði, is scarcely right): with this exception god is nowhere recorded till it appears in Icel., where it got a historical bearing]:—prop. a priest, sacerdos, and hence a liege-lord chief of the Icel. Commonwealth.

A. HISTORICAL REMARKS.—The Norse chiefs who settled in I. finding the country uninhabited, solemnly took possession of the land (land-nám, q. v.); and in order to found a community they built temple, and called themselves by the name of goði or hof-goði, 'temple priest'; and thus the temple became the nucleus of the new community which was called goðorð, n.:—hence hof-goði, temple-priest, and hingi, chief, became synonymous, vide Eb. passim. Many independent goðar and goðorð sprang up all through the country, until about year 930 the alþingi (q. v.) was erected, where all the petty sovereign chiefs (goðar) entered into a kind of league, and laid the foundation of a general government for the whole island. In 964 A. D. the constitution was finally settled, the number of goðorð being fixed at three in þing (shire), and three þing in each of the three other quarters, (but in the north); thus the number of goðar came to be nominally thence, really thirty-six, as the four in the north were only reckoned three, vide Íb. ch. 5. On the introduction of Christianity the goðar lost their priestly character, but kept the name; and the new bishops obtained seats in the Lögretta (vide biskup). About the year 1000 there were created new goðar (and goðorð), who had to elect just to the Fifth Court, but they had no seats in the Lögretta, and at that time the law distinguishes between forn (old) and ný (new) goðar:—in Glúm. ch. 1 the word form is an anachronism. It is curious, especially in the 12th century, the goðar used to take the lesser Oaths from political reasons, in order to resist the Romish clergy, who claimed the right of forbidding laymen to be lords of churches or to deal in church matters; thus the great chief Jón Loftsson was a sub-deacon; at last, about 1185, the archbishop of Norway forbade the bishop of Icel. to ordain any holder of a goðorð, unless they first gave up a goðorð, fyrir því bjóðum vér biskupum at vígja eigi þá menn er goð hafa, D. Í. i. 291. In the middle of the 13th century the king of Norway induced the goðar to hand their power over to him, and thus the union with Norway was finally brought about in the year 1262; since that time, by the introduction of new codes (1272 and 1281), the named dignity of goðar and goðorð disappeared altogether, so that the goðar begins and ends with the Commonwealth.

B. DUTIES.—In the alþingi the goðar were invested with the þing-rétta-skipan (q. v.), that is to say, they composed the Lögretta or Legislative consisting of forty-eight members—on the irregularity of the number vide Íb. ch. 5), and were the lawgivers of the country; secondly, they had the dómfegna (q. v.), or right of naming the men who were to sit in the courts, vide dómr:—as to their duties in the quarter-paments (vár-þing) vide Grág. þ. þ. and the Sagas. The authority of the goðar over their liegemen at home was in olden times somewhat patriarchal, vide e.g. the curious passage in Hænsþ. S. ch. 2; though no section of law relating to this interesting part of the old history on record, we can glean much information from the Sagas. It is to be borne in mind that the goðar of the Saga time (10th century) and those of the Grágás and Sturlunga time (12th and 13th centuries) were very different; the former were a kind of sovereign chiefs, who of free will entered into a league; the latter had become officials, who for neglecting their duties in parliament might be fined, and even forfeit the goðorð to their liegemen, vide Grág. þ. þ. Neither þing (q. v.) nor goðorð was ever strictly geographical (such is the opinion of Konrad Maurer), but changed from time to time; the very word goðorð is defined as 'power' (veldi) and was not subject to the payment of tithe, K. þ. K. 142. The goðorð could be parcelled out by inheritance or by sale; or they might, as in the case in the latter years of the Commonwealth, accumulate in one hand, vide esp. Sturl. passim, and Grág. The liegemen (þingmenn) were fully free to change their lords (ganga í lög með goða, ganga ór lög); every franklin (þingmaðr) had in parliament to declare his þingfest to name his liegship, and say to what goði and þing he belonged; the goði had to acknowledge him; so that a powerful or skillful goði might have liegemen scattered all over the country. But the nomination to the courts and the right of sitting in the legislative body were always bound to the old names, as fixed by the settlement of the year 964; and any one who sought the name or influence of a goði had to (by purchase, inheritance, or otherwise) to become possessor of a goði or one of the old traditional goðorð; see the interesting chapter Þing. The three goðar in one þing (shire) were called sam-goðar, joint-goðar for the sense of allsherjar-goði vide p. 17.

G. NAMES.—Sometimes a chief's name referred to the god whom especially worshipped, as Freys-Góði, Hrafn., Gisl., whence Freys-blíngar, q. v.; (the ör-góði is dubious); more frequently the name referred to the liegemen or county, e. g. Ljósveitinga-Góði, Tungu-Góði, ; but in the Saga time, góði was often added to the name almost a cognomen, and with some, as Snorri, it became a part of their name (Cato Censor in Latin); hann varðveitti þá hof, var hann þá laðr Snorri Góði, Eb. 42; seg, at sú sendi, er meiri vin var húsfreyjar at Fróða en Goðans at Helgafelli, 332. Arna-Magn. 134 folio, or Sb., and has since been made to serve as a collective name for all Icel. laws framed before the union with Norway, sometimes including, sometimes excluding the eccl. law (Kristinna-laga þáttir = K. þ. K.); the whole matter is fully treated by Maurer, s. v. 'Graagaas', in Ersch and Gruber's Encyclopedia; he makes out that the Icel. of the Commonwealth, although they had written laws, had no code, and that the passage in Íb. ch. 10 does not refer to codification, but to the committal of oral laws to writing; the two vellum MSS., the Kb. and Sb., are merely private collections of the 13th century, and differ very much one from the other. Upon the union with Norway, Iceland was for the first time blessed with a code, which they called Ironside (Js.); and a second code, the Jon's Book, was introduced A. A. Though the primitive form Guð rhymes with boð (bidding), (help), and many other words, the second form Guð rhymes with no other word, so that in hymns the poets are wont to use incomplete rhymes, as brauð (bread), nauð (need); and exact rhymes can only be obtained by the last syllables of derivatives, e.g. Íðranin blíðkar aptur | ef verður syndin tilreiknuð, Pass. 40. 4; or Upphaf alls mesta nauðs | áklögum ströng og reiði Guðs, 3. 14; Svo er nú syndin inn- | íðrandi sála kvitt við Guð, 50. 14; but these rhyme-syllables only occur in trisyllabic words (Gramm. p. xv):—the following examples of incomplete rhymes, Vinir þér enga veittu stoð | svo þap fengi eg við sannan Guð, Pass. 3. 7; Föðurlegt hjarta hefir | við hvern sem lífr kross og nauð, 3. 16; Herra minn þú varst | þu Guð | þá hæðni leiðst og krossins nauð, 40. 16; as also in the hymn, Til þín Heilagi Herra Guð | hef eg lypt sálu minni | af hug og lífa í hverri neyð | hjástöð treystandi þinni, Hólabók 108, rendering Ps. xxv; Lord's hymn, Ein feste burg ist unser Guð, is in the Icel. Guð, Övinnanlig borg er vor Guð | ágæta skjöldur og verja | hann er oss af allri nauð, Hólabók 182; Fyrir valtinn veraldar Guð | set þu á sannan Guð | sem allt skapafi fyrir sitt boð, 208 (in Hans' hymn); hugsjúkir eta harma brauð | hollari fæðu gefr Guð | sér þu þá þeir sofa, 124, Ps. cxvii. 2.

The word was in Icel. borrowed from English missionaries, and Icel. remains the only Scand. country where the Evangel is called Gospel; Danes, Swedes, and Norsemen, as well as Germans, use the Greek word. The true etymological sense, however, was lost, probably because the root vowel had become short in Engl. by the time that the word was transplanted to Icel., so that guðspjall was understood to mean not good spell, but God's spell:—gospel; í þann tíma er lokið var guðspjalli, Ó. GÖRA, ð, also spelt görva, gjörva, geyra, giora, gera: prop. görá, not góra (the ø was sounded nearly as y or ey), so that the g is to be sounded as an aspirate, however the word is spelt; and the insertion of i or j (gjóra, gjöra), which is usual in mod. writing, and often occurs in old, is phonetic, not radical, and gjöra and gjöra represent the same sound. The word in the oldest form had a characteristic v, and is spelt so on the Runic stones in the frequent Runic phrase, gaurva kubl, Baut., and Danske Runemind. passim; but also now and then in old Icelandic MSS., e. g. the Kb. of Sæm. The ö is still sounded in the east of Icel., whereas gera is the common form in speech, gjöra in writing:—the old pres. indic. used by the poets and in the laws is monosyllabic görr; with suffixed negative, görr-a, Hkr. i. (in a verse); mod. bisyllabic görir, which form is also the usual one in the Sagas—the old part. pass. was görr or gerr, geyrr, Fms. ix. 498, x. 75, where the v was kept before a vowel, and is often split with f, gorvan, gorvir, and gorfan, gorfir: dat. so-goro or so-guru adverbially = sic facto: the mod. part. gjörðr, gerðr, göðr, as a regular part. of the 2nd weak conjugation, which form occurs in MSS. of the 15th century, e. g. (beginning), where lögligr dómar no doubt refers to görð. A section of law about görð is contained in the Grág. at the end of Kaupa-þáttur, ch. 69–81 (i. 485–497), where even the curious case is provided for of one or all the umpires dying, or becoming dumb or mad, before pronouncing their verdict. This was a favourite way of settlement at the time of the Commonwealth, and suited well the sagacious and law-abiding spirit of the men of old: nor did the institution of the Fifth Court make any change in this; the görð was even resorted to in public matters, such as the introduction of Christianity in A. D. 1000. Good and leading men acted the part of public peacemakers (e. g. Njál in the 10th, Jón Loptsson in the 12th century); until at last, in the 13th century, the king of Norway was resorted to, but he misused the confidence put in him.

H

H (há) is the eighth letter. In the old Runic alphabet it was represented by N and H, which are used indiscriminately (but never H or I): N and H both occur on the Golden horn, the former once, the latter twice. This Rune was no doubt borrowed from the Greek or Latin. In the later common Runic alphabet this character was replaced by \* (arely \*), which we may infer was taken from the Greek  $\chi$  (the  $\gamma$  of the Runic alphabet) marked with a perpendicular stroke down the middle, rather than from the Latin X (see Ritschl's essay in the Rheinisches Museum, 1869, p. 22); yet the old form H is now and then found on the west of the later monuments, e.g. the stones from Snoldelev, Højeto-up, and Heltæs (Thorsen 15, 17, 335), on which monuments the \* is used for a: in some inscriptions \* serves both for b and soft g. The line of the Rune b was Hagall or Hagl, an Anglo-Saxon form, explained as meaning bail, hagl or kaldast korna (bail is the coldest of corns), in the Norse Runic poem; cp. bägl byð hvitust korna in the Anglo-Saxon poem, which is the prototype of the Norse. These names of the Anglo-Saxon and Norse poems are in no way derived from the line of the Rune, but are merely alike to the modern rhymes in English 3 C books, 'B is a Baker' or the like. The Hagall was the first of the second group of Runes, Hnias, which was therefore called Hagals—the family of Hagall (cp. introduction to F).

A. PRONUNCIATION AND SPELLING.—H is sounded as in English h, hous: the aspirate is still sounded in hl, br, bn much as in the English ll, rb: the bv is in the west and north of Icel. sounded as kv; but in the south and east the distinction is kept between bv and kv (hver a kettle, hver a quire, hvölum ubales and kvölum torments), as also in writing; and bv is sounded like ub in Northern English; in a small part of eastern Icel. it is sounded like Greek  $\chi$  (hvalr as  $\chi$ alr, hvað as  $\chi$ ), and this is probably the oldest and truest representation of the bv sound.

II. the b is dropped, 1. in the article inn, in, it, for hin, him, hit, which is often spent so in old MSS.  $\beta$ . in the personal pronoun hann, hún if following after another word, e.g. ef 'ann (ef hann), ein (ef hún), þó 'onum (þó honum), látt 'ann vera (láttu hann vera), eð 'enn að koma (segðu henni að koma); this is the constant pronunciation of the present time, but in writing the b is kept: whereas, at the beginning of a sentence the b is sounded, e.g. hann (hón) kom, þu (þú) came, but kom 'ann? (if asking the question).  $\gamma$ . in a few words as álfa and hálf, óst and hóst (cp. hósta), ökulbrækr and hökulbrækr.

2. in the latter part of such compounds as have nearly become monosyllables, as ein-ardr for ein-hardr: in -að, -þógi, -yð (Gramm. p. xxxiii, c. 1); elsk-ogi, var-ugi, öl-ogi, from hugr; örv-endr, tröll-endr, gram-endr, from hendr; litar-apt = litar-hapt: in -ald = hald, handar-ald, haf-ald; hlámr = lík-hámr, hér-amr = hér-hámr; skauf-ali, rang-ali, from hali; afi = at-hæfi, and perhaps in auð-œfi, ör-œfi, from hóf or hœfi; and -œfa = end-hœfa, to respond; hnapp-elda = hnapp-helda: in pr. names in -arr, -eiðr, -ildr, for -harr = herr, -halli, -heiðr, -hildr, (Ein-arr, þór-ali, Rín-eiðr, Yngv-ildr, etc.) In a few words, as hjúpr, and derivatives like hjúpr, hlímr and hlímr, hóp and opa, b seems to have been added. In some of the cases above cited both forms are still heard, but the b is more usual.

III. b is neither written nor sounded initial or medial, and has in all such cases been absorbed by the preceding vowel or simply dropped (see Gramm. p. xxx, col. 1).

IV. old MSS., especially Norse, use a double form gb and tb to mark a g or aspirate sound, e.g. sagha and saga, thing and þing; especially in inflexible syllables, -itb = -it, etc. V. a curious instance of gb (as in Welsh) rb for br is found occasionally in Runes, e.g. Rúnulfr for Hríulfr, Thorsen 335; to this corresponds the English spelling ub for bu, in ubite, ubeat, ubale, where, ubence, uby, ubelp, ubet, ubirl, ubarf, ubel, ubile, ubim, = Icel. hvitr, hveiti, hvalr, hvi, hvaðan, hvé, hválp, hvína, hvetja, hvirfill, hvarf, hvel, hvíld, hna, etc.

B. REMARKS, CHANGES, ETC.—In Icel. b is used as an initial letter only largely next to s; in modern Teutonic languages it has been greatly reduced through the dropping of the aspiration before the liquids l, n, r, at least before v, whereby all words in bl, bn, br, and bv have been transferred to the liquids and to v (see Gramm. p. xxxvi, signif. II.  $\beta$ ); the b in these words is essential to the etymology, and was in olden times common to all Teutonic languages, but in Scandinavia it was lost about the 11th or 12th century, so that not a single instance of bl, bn, br, or bv is on record in any MS. written in Norway; though old Norwegian poets of the 10th century used it in alliteration, so it must have been sounded at that time; b in bl, bn, br is therefore a test of a word being Icelandic and not Norse. In modern Icel. pronunciation the b has been lost in two or three words, as leiti for hleyti, a part, and rót which was borrowed from Norway about the 14th century; rót = root, a roof: it is a matter of course that the b is dropped in words which were borrowed from the English not earlier than the 12th century, as lávarðr, Early Engl. lauerd (lord), but A.S. bláfard. II. the b has been added in a few words to which it does not rightly belong, viz. in hneiss and hneisa for neiss and neisa; hnýsa for nýsa; hreifr (glad) for reifr; hnibra (to lower) for niðra (niðr); hlykkir (and hlykkjótr), a curve, for lykkir (cp. lykkja, a noose); hrjóta for rjóta, to snort; hlað, a lace, cp. Lat. laqueus; hnestla for nestla, a loop.  $\beta$ . in a few instances both forms are used to form double words, in hrifa and rifa, Lat. rapere; hraasa and rasa, to stumble; rata (= Goth. uraton), to find the way, but hrata, to fall (cp. Vsp. 52); hrjá and rjá, to vex.

2. the b seems to be a substitute for g in the words hneggja, hnegg, for gneggja, gnegg; þver-hnípt for þver-gnípt.  $\gamma$ . for k in hneif, hnúi, hnefi, hnótr, hnútr, hnórr, hnakk, hnjúkr, hnoða, hnapp, for knifr, knúi, knefi... knoða, knapp; this spelling is found in MSS. of the 15th century, e.g. the Hrokkinnskinná passim (see letter K). In all these cases the b is etymologically wrong; in some of the words above (as in hneisa) it is found even in very old MSS., e.g. the Mork.; but the true etymology is seen from the alliteration in old poems, e.g. Hm. 48, 140, Hm. 26 (raut, reginkunni); Stor. 13 (Nýsmuk hins | ok hygg at því); Edda 105 (reifr gækk herr und hlífir | híziz...); but not so in modern poets, e.g. Hröktu því svo og hrjáðu þig | Herra minn ílsku-þjóðir, Pass. 9; Forvitinn holdsins hnýsir þrátt | i Herrans leyndardóma, 21. 2; Nær eg fell eðr hrasa hér | hæstur Drottinn vill reidast mér, 5. 6.

III. the Gothic has a special sign for bv, viz. w, which thus answers to ub in English, e.g. wan = when. 2. when followed by an o or u, the v in bv is dropped, e.g. hót booting, hóta to boot, cp. Goth. wota and woitan; as also in hót = hvat ubar, höll from hváll, hjól and hvel, hólf and hválf, horfinn, hurfu, hyrri for hvorfinn, hvurfu, hvyrri.

C. INTERCHANGE.—Latin c and Greek  $\kappa$  answer to the Teut. and Icel. b; thus Lat. cāper, cāpus, cānis, carbasus, centum, cervus, cōr (cord); collum, corvus, cūtis, = Icel. hafr, höfuð, hundr, hörr (hörr-), hundrað, hjörtr (hirtu) and hjarta, háls (hals), hrafn, húð; calx, cp. hæl; cardo, cp. hjartir; claudius, cp. haltr; clivus, cp. hlíð; corpus, cp. hræ (hræ-); cerebrum, cp. hjarni; crater, cp. hurð; cūs, cp. hein; clāmo, cp. hljómr; cēlo, cp. hylja and Hel; coelum, cp. holr (hollow); cāpio (-cāpio) = hefja; prin-cipium = upp-haf; cēteri, cp. hindri; co- and con-, cp. hjá; citra, cp. hédra (hér is a contracted form); clānis, cp. hlau; clīno, cp. hlein, Engl. to lean; cāleo, cp. hlé, hlýr; cōlo, cp. hald; custodio, cp. hodd, Engl. to board; cella, cp. hellicr carcer, cp. högr; circus, cp. hringr; cōrium, cp. hörrund; curvus, cp. hverfa (to turn round); Gr. καλλίαν, κάλιστος, = Icel. heltri, helltr (höltr); καλαμος, κεφάλη, κέρας, κύνων, καρδία, = Icel. hlámr, höfuð, horn, hundr, hjarta; κύνος, cp. hún; κλήρος, cp. hlutr; κυκλός, cp. högl-d, hvel, hjól; κόϊλος, cp. holr; κόραξ, cp. hrafn; κρέας, cp. hræ; κράνιον, cp. hjarni and hvorn or hvörn (the two pebble-like bones in a fish's head), cp. also Goth. waipnis; κρίος, cp. G. The word hafa is in the Icel., as in other Teut. languages, used as an auxiliary verb with a part. pass. of another verb, whereby a compound preterite and pluperfect are formed as follows: I. in transitive verbs with acc. the participle also was put in acc., agreeing in gender, number, and case with the objective noun or pronoun; this seems to have been a fixed rule in the earliest time, and is used so in all old poems down at least to the middle of the 11th century, to the time of Sighvat (circ. A.D. 990-1040), who constantly used the old form,—átt is an apostrophe for áttá in the verse Ó. H. 81:

2. references from prose; this old form has since been turned into an indecl. neut. sing. part. -it. The old form was lost in the strong verbs and the weak verbs of the first conjugation in the earliest prose both forms are used, although the indecl. is more freq. even in the prose writers, as Íb., the Heiðarv. S., the Mirac. book in Bs., Njála, Ó. H., (Thorodd seems only to use the old form as may be seen from the following references, Björn hafði særða þá menn, Nj. 262; hann mundi hana hafa gipta honum, 47; hann ha þá leidda saman hestana, 264: ek hefi sendan mann, Ísl. (Heiðarv. ii. 333; ek hefi senda menn, id.: hafa son sinn ór helju heimt Bs. (Miracle-book) i. 337; en er þeir höfðu niðr settan sveini 349; hann hafði veidda fimm tegu fiska, 350; er þér hefir neisu görra, Ó. H. 107: þá hefi ek fyrri setta þá í stafrófi, Ská (Thorodd) 161; þar hefi ek við görra þessa stafi fjóra, id.; hafa ha samsettan, 167: góða fylgd hefir þú mér veitta, Þorst Síðu H. sagði, at Ólafr konungr hafði sendan hann, Bs. i. 11: Þyri, er hert hafði festa nauða, Fms. x. 393 (Ágrip); hefi ek þá svá signaða magnaða, v. 236: hefir sólin gengna tvá hluti, en einn únginginn, K. p. 92 (Lund's Syntax, p. 12).

β. again, neut. indecl., hana hafði átt í þorðdr, Ísl. ii. 192: hún hafði heimt húskarl sinn ..., Ísl. (Heiðarv. ii. 339; hann hefir ekki svá vel gyrt hest minn, 340; hefir þú eigi mik, 341; hve hann hafði lokkat hann, id.; gistingar hefi ek yðr fén, 343: þeir höfðu haft úfríð ok orrostur, Íb. 12; hann hafði tekið lögsö 14: stafr er átt hafði þorlárk, Bs. (Miracle-book) i. 340; er þar hö uppteki ketilinn ok hafit ..., 342; göngu e hann hafði gíngit, 3. e. sleiggiuna hafði niðr felit, 346; sem maðr hefði nýsett (hana) n id.; jartein þá er hann þóttisk fingit hafa, 347; hafði prestrinn í fram sveininn, 349: hjálmar er Hreiðmarr hafði átt, Edda 73: hafa e sína heitstrenging, Fms. (Jónsv. S.) xi. 141: slíkan dóm sem hann he mér hugat, Ó. H. 176, etc. passim:—at last the inflexion disappeared altogether, and so at the present time the indecl. neut. sing. is used throughout; yet it remains in peculiar instances, e.g. konu hefi eg mér festa, L. xiv. 20, cp. Vidal. ii. 21. This use of the inflexive part. pass. is often serve as a test of the age of a poem, e.g. that Sólárljóð was composed at a later date may thus be seen from verses 27, 64, 72, 73, 75; but this test is to be applied with caution, as the MSS. have in some cases changed the true forms (-inn, -ann, and -it, -an being freq. abbreviations in the MSS. so as to render the reading dubious). In many cases the form is no doubt to be restored, e.g. in vegit to vegin, Fm. 4, 23; þ to þúinn, Hkv. Hjörv. 15; borit to borinn, Hkv. i. 1; beðit to beðinn, Fms. 48; orðit to orðinn, Og. 23; roðit to roðinn, Em. 5; brotið to brottinn, Hkv. 24, etc.: but are we to infer from Ls. 23, 26, 33, that a poem is of a comparatively late age?

II. the indecl. neut. sing. is, both in the earliest poems and down to the present day, used in following cases:

1. with trans. verbs requiring the dat. or gen.; hefi fengit e-s, hann hafði fengit konu; hafa hefit e-s, Fms. xi. 25; er hafði beðit fjár, þkv. 32; stillir hefir stefnt mér, Hkv. Hjörv. 33, so in endless cases. 2. in the reflex. part. pass.; þeir (hann) h (hefir) látisk, farisk, sagisk, etc. 3. in part. of intrans. neut. v. e.g. þeir þær (hann, hún), hafa (hefir) setið, staðit, gengit, legið, fí komit, verit, orðit, lifað, dáið, heitið ..., also almost in every line of prose and poetry. 4. in trans. verbs with a neut. sing. in oblique case the difference cannot be seen.

The compound preterite is common to both the Romance and Teutonic languages, and seems to be older in the former than in the latter; Grimm suggests that it originated with the French, and the spread to the Teutons. That it was not natural to the latter is shown by the facts, that a. no traces of it are found in Gothic, nor in the earliest Old High German glossaries to Latin words. β. in est Scandinavian poetry we can trace its passage from declinable to declinable.

y. remains are left in poetry of a primitive uncommanded preterite infinitive, e.g. stóðu = hafa staðit, mundu, skyldu, vildu, see Gramm. p. xxv, col. 2. We may here note a curious dropping of the verb hefir, at ek em kominn hingat til lands, ok verit (having been) langa hríð utan-lands, Ó. H. 31, cp. Am. 52; barn at ..., en vegit slíka hefir sem þorvaldr var, Glúm. 382. On this interesting matter see Grimm's remarks in his Gramm. iv. 146 sqq.

7. In some instances the use of dat. and acc. wavers, e.g. halda húsum, to keep up the houses, Grág. ii. 278, 335; h. hliði, to keep the gate in repair, 265; but halda hlið (acc.), 332; to keep, observe, h. lögm, gríðum, boðorðum, Glúm. 333, Grág. i. 357, ii. 166, 623, 28; hélt hann þessu sumu, Fms. x. 416 (Agrip); halda illa orðum, vii. In most of these instances the acc. is the correct case, and the dat. is due either to careless transcribers or incorrect speaking; in some instances an enclitic um has been taken for a dative inflexion, thus e.g. sáttum haldi in Stor. l. c. is to be restored to sátt um haldi; eiðum haldit in Bkv. l. c. to eið (for eiða) um haldit; in others the prep. um has caused the confusion, as 'halda njón um at' has been changed into halda njónsum at. But in the main the distinction between the use of dat. and acc. is fixed even at the present time: the acc. seems to represent the more primitive usage of this verb, the dat. the secondary.

HAMALT, n. adj., only in the old phrase, fylkja hamalt, synonymous with svinfylkja, to draw up a wedge-shaped column in the form of a hog's snout; thus defined, hann hefir svinfylkt hir sinum—Hver man Hringi hafa kennt hamalt at fylkja? (who has taught king Ring to draw up the pbalanx of hamalt?) . . . Hringr hafði svinfylkt öllu liði sínu, þá þótti þó svá þykkt fylkingin yfir at sjá, at rani var í brjósti, Ring had drawn all his troops up in a hog-shaped column, so that the ranks looked like the deeper for the snout-formed shape of the front, Fas. i. 380; hildingr fylkti hamalt, a paraphrase from hann fylkti liði sínu svá, at rani var framan á fylkingar-brjóstinu, Fms. xi. 304: used of a column of ships in a sea-fight, vi. 314 (in a verse), cp. also Skv. 2. 23, Fas. ii. 40 (in a verse); a description of the cuneiform column is given in Sks. 384; in Skjöld. S. its invention is attributed to Óðin himself, and it was a favourite battle array with the men of old.

HAMARR, m., dat. hamri, pl. hamrar, [A. S. hamor; Engl. bammer; O. H. G. hamar; Germ. and Dan. bammer; Swed. bammare] — a hammer; h. töng, steði, Edda 9, Vkv. 18, Landn. 212 (in a verse); the thunderbolt was in the northern mythology represented as a hammer, — the hammer Mjölnir, Edda (Sksm.) 15, 26, 28–30, 58, 70, passim, þkv. passim, Hbl. 47; hann (the idol) var merkr eptir þór ok hefir hamar í hendi, Ó. H. 108, O. T. 44; þrúð-hamar, the mighty hammer, Ld. 57, 59, 61, 63: the hammer was the holy sign with the heathens, answering to the cross of the Christians, hann görði hamar yfir, he made the sign of the hammer over it, Fms. i. 35; þórr tók hamarinn Mjölni ok brá upp ok vígði haf-stökurnar, Edda 28, cp. also þkv. 30, where the bride and bridegroom were to be marked with the holy sign; hence þórs-hamar = the character  $\mathfrak{H}$ , which occurs on a few of the earliest heathen Runic stones (e.g. Thorsen, pp. 17, 329), cp. also Ísl. þjóðs. i. 446; this  $\mathfrak{H}$  is evidently an imitation of the thunderbolt.

II. metaph. a hammer-shaped crag, a crag standing out like an anvil; þar stendr hamarr mikill fyrir þeim, Bs. i. 601; þeir leggja skip sín millum hamra veggia, Grett. 83, Fas. iii. 37; þritugr, fertugr . . . hamarr, a crag thirty, forty . . . fatombs big, i. 159: so in the saying, kljúfa þritugan hamarinn til e-s, to split a thirty fatombs' rock, to make great efforts, to make Herculean efforts in a thing, metaph. from cutting roads through rocks: in pl. hamrar, crags; fluga-hamrar, sjávar-hamrar, sea-crags; ogres were believed to live in crags, hence the phrase, sem genginn út úr hömrum, i.e. looking as wild as a crag-ogre, svá flilligr sem genginn sé út úr sjávar-hömrum, Nj. 182.

COMPS: (hamar- and hamra-), hamar-tröll, n. a crag-ogre, Grett. (in a verse).

Ól., Hamarrinn mér í greipar gékk | þá gæfu-markið fina, and hamar-skornu og glöppu-gat | görðu í hægra eyra. 3. a kind of fish, Edda (Gl.): prop. a false reading for humarr (q. v.), a lobster.

hamask, að, dep. to rage, to be taken by a fit of fury in a fight, synonymous to ganga berserks-gang (see p. 61): the word is derived from hamr, prob. owing to a belief that such persons were possessed by a strange spirit or demon; cp. hamr, hamstoli, hamramr, all of them words referring to a change of shape:—svá er sagt, at þá hamaðisk hann, ok fleiri vóru þeir föru-nautar hans er þá hömuðusk, Eg. 122; hamask þú nú, Skallagrímur, at syni þínum, 192; Þórir hljóp þá af baki, ok er svá sagt, at hann hamaðisk þá it fyrsta sinn, Gullþ. 30, Fas. iii. 343, Landn. 119; Fránmarr jarl hafði hamask í arnar líki, Sæm. 95: the word is still used, to work as hard as a giant.

ham-farir, f. pl. a mythical word, the 'farir' or travelling in the assumed shape of an animal, fowl or deer, fish or serpent, with magical speed over land and sea, the wizard's own body meantime lying lifeless and motionless; graphically depicted in Yngl. S. ch. 7, Vd. ch. 12, Hkr. (O. T.) ch. 37; hann sendi Finna tvá í hamförum til Íslands, Landn. 174; Haraldr konungr bauð kunngum manni at fara í hamförum til Íslands, sá fór í hvals-líki, etc., Hkr. i. 228.

ham-frær, f. pl., from hamfrú (?), witches, an ām. ley.; leirblót gört í manns-líki af leiri eðr deigi, er hamfrær, N. G. L. i. 383, v. 1.

ham-föng, n. pl. frenzy, fury, Sturl. ii. 137.

ham-hleypa, u. f. a 'ham-leaper', a witch that travels in hamfarir, Eg. 421, Fas. ii. 80, 390, Gullþ. 64: in mod. usage Icel. say, hann er mesta hamhleypa, þe is a great h., works like a giant, of one who does great work in little time; hann er hamhleypa að skrifa, hamhleypa að vinna, etc.

hamingja, u. f. luck, fortune; prop. in a personal sense, a guardian spirit, answering to the guardian angel of Christians; derived from hamr, for the guardian spirits of men—and every man had his hamingja—were believed to take the shape sometimes of animals, sometimes and more commonly of human beings, esp. that of women; but they were themselves supernatural beings; that the hamingjur were giant-females proceeding from the great Norns—who were the hamingjur of the world—is borne out by the passage in Vpm. 48, 49. Hamingja and fylgja or fylgju-kona (Hallfred S. ch. 11) seem to be nearly synonymous, as also gefa, gipta, auðna, heil; but hamingja is the most personal word, and was almost symbolical of family relationship. At the hour of death the hamingja left the dying person and passed into a dear son, daughter, or beloved kinsman; cp. Hallfr. S. ch. 11, and esp. the charming tale in Glúm. ch. 9. One might also impart one's own good luck to another, hence the phrase leggja sína hamingju með e-m, almost answering to the Christian, 'to give one's blessing to another.' (in and about Reykjavík [Ulfr. baban; A. S. bæ; Engl. bang; O. H. G. baban; Germ. bang; Dan. bange; Swed. bänge];—to bang, Lat. pendere: a. to bang, suspended; hvers manns alvæpni hékk yfir rúmi hans, Eg. 88; vápnar þar hénnga hjá þeim, 377; þetta it stóra sverð er uppi hangir, Fb. 120; hann hefir nú tvá daga á krossi hangit, 625. 79. β. to elect; svá hanga þykt á þeim skotin, Al. 138; ok hangði hón á lifrinni, til er hann dó, Edda 76; en ef við hangir, if it bangs fast to, N. hangí, a, m. a law term, a body hanging on a gallows, Fms. v. 31: mythol. phrase, sitja, setjask undir hanga, to sit under a gallows, of him in order to acquire wisdom or knowledge of the future;—for this stition see Yngl. S. ch. 7;—whence Odin is called hanga-guð, h. dróttinn, hanga-týr, the god or lord of the banded, Edda 109. Lex. Poët.; varðat ek fróðr und forsum | fór ek aldregi at göllum ... nam ek eigi Yggjar feng und hanga, I became not wise under falls, I never dealt in witchcraft, I did not get the share of Odin the poetical gift) under the gallows, i. e. I am not adept in poetry, 3 (MS., left out in the printed edition). According to another it seems, a truer and older myth, Odin himself was represented as hanging on the tree Ygg-drasil, and from the depths beneath took the hidden mystery of wisdom, Hm. 139; so it is possible that his names refer to that; cp. also the curious tale of the blind man Grimm's Märchen, No. 107, which recalls to mind the heathen the one-eyed Odin sitting under the gallows.

HANN, pers. pron. masc. he; fem. HÓN or HÚN, sbe; for the pronunciation of this word see introduction to letter h; as to the inflexion Gramm. p. xxi; in the MSS. the word is usually abbreviated h = hann; h = hön; hm = hánun; har = hennar; hi or he = henni: the old dat. was hánun, as shewn by rhymes, mána vegr and hánun, Haustl.; in Icel. it was no doubt sounded hánun, by way of umlaut; it was then added hönun with a long vowel, and lastly honum with a short vowel, which also is the mod. form; the old MSS. often spell hánun in full; spelling hönun in old printed books recalls the old form hánun; from 9, 7 it may be seen that in the middle of the 17th century the dative was sounded precisely as at present. 2. sing. fem. hön (ho in mod. use, boo in Lancashire) seems to be the older form; the MSS. use both h = hön and hún, but the former is the usual one; it was prob. sounded hön, which again points to a long root vowel, hánna, hána? [Cp. Ulf. Germ. er; A.S., Engl., and Hel. be; old Fris. bi; in the Scand. forms with a suffixed demonstrative particle, vide Gramm. p. xxviii; Dan. and Swed. han, bun, etc.]

B. As this word appears almost in every line only special usages are mentioned, as, e.g. maðr færir ómaga fram ok berir fé undir hann (sc. ómaga), eðr eigi hann (nom., the same) fé, þá skal hann (nom., maðr) beida hann (acc., sc. ómaga) með vátta, at hann (nom., the same) seli hánun (dat., sc. maðr) fjár-heimting á hönd þeim mönnum hann (nom., sc. ómaga) á fé undir, Grág. i. 279; here the context is perplexing, chiefly owing to the identity of acc. and nom. sing. masc., also because the pron. is sometimes demonstr., sometimes reflexive; in the latter case an Icel. would now say sér instead of hánun; so also, þá skal hann beida sámpingis-goða, at hann fái honum (i. e. síb) mann, again, skal hann selja sókn ok vörn ef hann vill, ok svá varð-luðin fjár síns þess er hann á hér eptir, 146; þá skal hön ráða við frænda síns (ber) nokkurs, 307; Gunnarr kenndi féit at þat var sama sem hann (i. e. Njal) hafði honum (i. e. to Gunnarr) greitt, N. 56.

II. the pers. pron. is often prefixed to a pr. name, as a sign of familiarity; farit upp til hestsins ok gætið hans Kols, Nj. 5; eðr hverr maðr er hann Gunnarr, what sort of a man is Gunnarr? ok hleypr á hann þorkell upp, 114; ok leitið eftir at honum Höskuldi, and look after Höskuld, 171; sæmd er ek veitta honum þórólf bróður þum, Eg. 112; segir hann Pálmir, Fms. xi. 47; hön Ingibjörg, 49; þá Gísl, Grett. (in a verse); ok þerjask við hann Ólaf, Fagrsk. 86; þá Vigólf, Sól.; svá er, segir hann Þórðr, Ísl. ii. 329;—this has become v. freq. in mod. conversational usage, so that a person (nay, even an animal or a ship that has a name) is scarcely ever named without the pron., bl'ann Jón að koma, segð' onum Jóni, vekt' ana Sigríði; hún Sigga li, hann Jón litli, etc.; or of ponies, sækt' ann Brún, legð' á ana Skjónu; the dialogue in Ísl. Þjóðs. i. 612,—ég skal fylla mína hl, segir 'ún Ht, ég ét sem ég þoli, segir 'ann bóli, etc.; or Kvöldv. ii. 197,—taktú þá frá 'enni Reyðr ok gefð' 'enni Hymru, hún Húfa hefir flækt sig í unbandinu.

(in a verse); eiga sér hauk í horni, to have a hawk in the corner, to have one to back one; or perhaps the phrase is, hrók í horni, a rook in the corner, borrowed from chess. Hawks were in olden times carried on the wrist, whence in poetry the hand is called the seat, cliff, land of the hawk, haug-borð, -klif, -land, -mærr, -storð, -strönd, -vöðr, the adjectives hauf-fránn (of the eye, flashing as a hawk's eye), hauf-ligr, -lyndr, -snarr, -snjallr are all of them epithets of a bold man, Lex. Poët.: hauka-veiði, n. hawking, Gpl. 429: hauf-nefr, m. hawk-bill, a nickname, Landn.; sparr-h., a sparrowhawk.

Golgotha is rendered Hausaskelja-staðr, m., Matth. xxvii. 33; in poetry the heaven (vault of heaven) is called the skull of the giant Ymir, undir gömlum Ymis hausi, under the old skull of Ymir, sub divo, Arnór, see Edda, Vþm., Gm. l. c. II. the bead, of beasts, fishes, þorsk-hauss, hross-h., hunds-h., nauts-h.; of men only as in contempt = blockhead.

heið-bjartir, adj. serene, Lex. Poët., freq. in mod. usage. heiðin-dómr, m. beatbendom, Hkr. ii. 65, freq. in mod. usage, but originally in two words.

heiðingi, a, m. [heiðinn], a beaten, gentle, Ó. H., Nj., Bs. (Kristni S.) passim. II. poet. a wolf, either metaph. from heiðingi, or from heiðr, a beath, one who lives on beaths and wildernesses, Edda (Gl.), Akv. 8; it occurs besides twice or thrice in poems of the time of king Harald Harðráði, 11th century.

heiðingligr, adj. beaten, Fms. i. 137, passim. HEIÐINN, adj. [A. S. bæðen; Engl. beaten; O. H. G. beidan; Germ. beide and beidnisch; Dan. bedensk; this word is prob. derived not from heiðr, a beath, but from Gr. ἐθνικός as used in the N. T.; Ulf. in a single passage, Mark vii. 26, renders γυνή Ἑλληνία by gino baiþno; it is even possible that the eccl. paganus, which, according to Du Cange, only appears after A. D. 365, may be merely a translation of the Teutonic word under the notion that baiþan was derived from baiþi = a beath, open country (Gr. ἀγρός, Lat. pagus); then, as baiþi was pronounced much like ēthvos, the true etymology of heiðinn was lost; and so the long vowel and the aspirated initial may be accounted for. To the worshippers of Thor and Odin the name beathen was unknown; Christians were the first that used the word, and we meet with it first in Hkm. of Eyvind, who speaks of heiðin goð, beathen gods; heiðinn stallr, a beathen altar, Kristni S., by the missionary Þorvald, A. D. 982; it is also used by Hallfred and Sighvat; heiðinn dómr, beatbendom, Sighvat; heiðnar stjörnur, beaten stars, Sól.: the verse in Ísl. ii. 50 is spurious (as are all the verses of that Saga); so also the verses in Landn. 84 (Hb.), and in Bergþúa-þáttur, where the word heiðinn is put into the mouth of a ghost and a giant, in songs which are merely a poetical fiction of later times. The word heiðingi for wolf is curious: probably it is merely a metaph. phrase from heiðinn, gentilis, and if so, it gives an additional evidence to the age of the poem Atla-kviða; which poem, from its nickname the 'Greenlandish,' cannot be older than the discovery of Greenland, A. D. 985.] = beathen, gentilis, ethnicus, the Sagas passim, esp. Nj. ch. 101–106, Kristni S., Ó. T., Ó. H., etc.: a child not christened was in olden times called heathen, N. G. L. i. 340; heiðit morð, the murder of an infant not christened, 339: in mod. Icel. usage, a boy or girl before confirmation is called heathen; this improper use of the word is caused by a confusion between baptism and confirmation: so in Norway a woman between child-birth and churching is called heathen (Ivar Aasen).

heiðir, m., poet. a hawak, Edda (Gl.). heiðnask, að, dep. to become beaten, Fms. x. 313. heiðneskr, adj. beaten, H. E. ii. 91 (rare). II. from HEIÐ-mörk, f. a county in Norway, D. N.

G. baida; Germ. beide; Dan. bede; Swed. bed]; = a beath; in Icel. particularly heiðr (or heiði) is chiefly used of a low barren beath or fell; thus in local names heiðr is a common name for the barren tracts of fell between the foot of one fjord or dale and another, see the map of Icel. passim, Nj. 158, Eg. 137, 275, Grág. i. 440. as Fr. sire, Engl. sir, see the Sagas passim:

I. as a title: in A. D.

1277 knights and barons were created in Norway, to whom the title of Herra was given; Herra Rafn, Herra Þorvarðr, Herra Sturla, etc., Árna S., Laur. S., Ann. passim: the bishops and abbots were also so styled, e. g. Herra Arngrímur (an abbot), Bs. ii. After the Reformation, Herra became an integral part of the style of bishops, as Síra of priests, Herra Guðbrandr, Herra Þorlákur, Herra Oddr, etc., and can only be applied to the Christian name; cp. the ditty in which the old woman addresses the bishop by Síra, and is rebuked for her rudeness, Sælir verid þér, Síra minn, | sagða eg við Biskupinn; | ansaði mér þá aprt hinn, | þú áttir að kall' 'ann Herra þinn. In mod. usage Herra is often applied to any person whatever, but only in writing; for in conversation the Ícel has no equivalent to the Engl. Mr. or Germ. Herr, and a person is simply addressed by his name or other title, Síra if a clergyman, and the like. In the N. T. dróttinn, hera, and lávaur (from Engl.) are used indiscriminately.

HERSIR, m. [akin to herað and herr], a chief, lord, the political name of the Norse chiefs of the earliest age, esp. before the time of Harold Fairhair and the settlement of Iceland: respecting the office and authority of the old hersar the records are scanty, as they chiefly belonged to the prehistorical time; they were probably not liegemen, but resembled the godar (vide goði) of the old Ícel. Commonwealth, being a kind of patriarchal and hereditary chiefs: in this matter the old Landnáma is our chief source of information:—Björn Buna hét hersir ágætr í Noregi, son Veðrar-Gríms hensis í Sogni, móðir Gríms var Hervör dóttir Þorgerðar Eylaugs-dóttur hensis ór Sogni, Landn. 39; Arinbjörn h. ór Fjörðum, 66; Ási h., 76, 303, and another of the same name, 109; Ketill Veðr h. af Hringaríki, 94; Hrólfr h. af Ögðum, 48, 126; Ketill Raumr hét h. ágætr í Raumsdal, 173; Gormr h. ágætr í Svíþjóð, 195; Grimr h., 204; Þorsteinn Höfði h. á Hörðalandi, 228; Þórir Haukefr h., 237; Úlfr Gildir h. á þelamörk, 292; Veðr-Ormr h., 314; Arinbjörn h., Eg. Fb. i. 23; hersar hafa verit fyrri frændr minir, ok vil ek ekki bera herra nafn en þeir, Fms. i. 299: it is also prob. that by ágætr and göfugr (q. v.) the Landnáma means a hersir. At the time of Harold Fairhair the old hersar gradually became liegemen (lendir menn) and were ranked below a jarl (earl), but above a höldr (yeoman), the scale being konungr, jarl, hersir, höldr, þiandi, see the record in Hkr. i. 80 (Har. S. Hárf. ch. 6), as also Edda 93: the name then becomes rare, except that hersir and lendr maðr are now and then used indiscriminately, heita þeir hersar eða lendir menn, Edda l. c. The old Norse hersar were no doubt the prototype of the barons of Normandy and Norman England. COMPS: hensis-heiti, n. the title of a h., Edda (Ht.) hensis-nafn, n. id., Fb. i. 23.

B. When there was no adjective the article became a suffix to the noun (see Gramm. pp. xix, xx), a usage common even in early poetry, but extremely rare in prose; the reason is, not that the poems were composed before the suffixed article had come into use, but that the metres themselves in which all the old poems were composed are other than that usage, and are not well adapted to it, so that the absence of the article became traditional. The old poem Harbarðsljóð makes an exception, no doubt not from being later than all other poems, but from being composed in a peculiar metre, half verse and half prose; thus in the single poem alone there are nearly twenty instances, or about twice as many as in all the other poems together:—váginn, Hbl. 2, 13, 11; sundit, 1, 3, 8, 13; verðinum, 4; eikjunn, 7; skipit, ið; stöðna, landit, leiðina, 55; höfuðit, 15; bátinum, 53; veggins, stokksins, steinsins, 5; matrinn, 3; other solitary instances are, göðin öll, Vsp. 27 (prob. somewhat corrupt); eiki-köstinn, Gh. 20; vömmín vár, Ls. 52.

II. In rose, old and modern, the suffixed article occurs at every step; only or two instances are worth noticing as peculiar to the Icelandic: 1. creative in addressing; konan, O woman! mjöðnannan, ið., Sighvat (verse of A. D. 1018, and so in mod. usage); elskan! hjartað! heillin! ástin, my love! dear! heart! þursinn! Fas. i. 385; hundarnir! = the kóves, Od. xxii. 35: also with another word, barnið gott, good child! þrúðna-þussinn, thou monster giant! Miðgarðs-orminn! Fas. i. 373. 2.
 esp. if with a possessive adjective following, as in Gr. ὁμός, τοῦμόν, τὰμά, etc.; elskan mín, ástin mín, hjartað mitt, góðrinn minn! hér er nú ástin minn, here is my darling! Sturl. ii. 78, of a father presenting a darling child to a friend; and so in mod. usage: as abuse, hundrinn þinn, thou dog!
 Ísl. ii. 176; þjófrinn þinn! Fms. vii. 127; dyðrillinn þinn! ii. 279; hund-unum þínum! vi. 323: this use is not confined to the vocative, e.g. konan mín biðr að heilsa, my wife (kona mín is never used); maðrinn minn, my husband; biðdu foreldrana þína (ask thy parents) að lofa þér að fara; augun hans, his eyes, Pass. 24. 4; hugrinn vor og hjartað sés, our mind and heart (cp. Gr. τῷ ἐμῷ θυμῷ), 43. 5; svo hjartað bæði og málið mitt! mikli samhuga nafnið þitt, 10. 7; gef þú að móður-málið mitt, 35. 9; bókin mín, my favourite book, my own book; as also, fáðu mér hattinn minn, vellingana mína, skóna mína, give me my hat, gloves, shoes; tungan í þér, augun í þér, thy tongue, thy eyes; höfuðið á mér, fætrir á mér, my head, my feet; hendrnar á þér ('á mér, á þér' are here equivalent to a possessive, see p. 37, C. IV), thy hands, cp. Homer, τὰ δὲ γούνατα; hestana þína, Gr. ἵππους τοὺς σούς: similar is the instance, vömmín vár, the sins of ours, Ls. 52; this may be a remnant of a time when the article was used separately, even with an indefinite adjective. 3. a double article, one suffixed to the noun and the other prefixed to the word in apposition; hirðin sú in Danska, Fms. vi. 323; þau in stóru skipin, viii. 384 and passim: again, when a noun is put in the genitive after another noun the former has no article; as the Engl. phrase 'the fish of the sea and the fowl of the air' is in Icel. 'fiskar sjávarins og fuglar loftins'; but this belongs to the syntax; see also Grimm's D. G. iv. 432.

C. SPECIAL CHANGES, in mod. usage: I. the demonstr. pron. sá, sú, það has in speech generally taken the place of inn, in, it; thus, sá gamli maðr, sú gamla kona, það gamla skáld; sometimes the article is dropped altogether, e.g. á fimta degi, on the fifth day (=á enum fimta degi); á sómu stundu, in the same hour; even in old writers this is found, með sómu ætlan, Bs. i. 289; á níundu tíð dags, Stj. 41, (but rarely); yet the old form is often retained in writing. II. in case A. II. the article may be dropped; þann gamla man, þá gömlu konu, það gamla skáld, þú armi, etc.; sá ráða-góði, sá goðum-líki, sá ágæti Odysseifr, sú vitra Penelopa, sá Jarðkringjandi Pósidon, Od. passim (in Dr. Egilsson's translation). III. in case A. III. 1. the article is also dropped, Knútr Ríki, Haraldr Hárfagri; even old writers (esp. in later vellums) omitted it now and then, Hálfðan Svarta, Fms. i. 1; Haraldr Grænski, 90; Haraldr Hárfagri, 192; Óttarr ungi, Hdl.: even in the Sæm. Cod. Reg., Völs-ungr ungi, Skv. 3. 1, 3. IV. in case A. III. 2. the pronouns sá, sú, það, and hinn, hin, hit may be used indiscriminately, although the former is more usual. V. lastly, in case B. the suffixed article has gained ground, and is in modern prose used more freq. than in ancient.

CONCLUSION.—The old poetical language, with the sole exception of a single poem, had no article in the modern and proper sense; in every instance the 'inn, in, it' bears the character of a demonstrative pronoun, preceding an adjective and enhancing and emphasising its sense, like the pers. pron. hann, q. v.; but it is never attached to a single substantive; when the adjective was placed in apposition after a noun, the pronoun came to stand as an enclitic just after the noun, and was sounded as if suffixed thereto; at last it was tacked as an actual suffix to single nouns standing without apposition, and thus the true suffixed article gradually arose, first in speech, then in writing; whereas at the same time the old pronominal enclitic (A. I-III) gradually went out of use, and was either dropped or replaced by the stronger demonstrative pronoun 'sá, sú.'

HINN, HIN, HITT, demonstr. pron., prob. identical in etymology with the preceding word, from which it is however distinguished, 1. by the neut. hitt, Dan. bint; 2. by the initial aspirate, which is never dropped; 3. by being a fully accented pronoun, so that the b can stand as an alliterative letter, e.g. bandar ennar bægrí | mun ek binnar geta, Ls.; veitkat ek þitt hvart Heita | þungr ..., Hallfred; Hitt kvæð þá
 Hamðir, etc., Hdm. 23, 25, Korm. 40; Raun er þins at Heinir | þæ ...,
 Skáld biðr þins at baldi | þjálm ..., Sighvat, Hkv. Hjörv. 26: [Ulf.
 jains = ékeivos; A. S. geond; Engl. yon; Germ. jener.]

A. This pronoun is used, I. in a demonstr. sense, emphatically and without being opp. to a preceding demonstr.; raun er hins at ..., it is proved that ...; skáld biðr hins, at ..., Sighvat; veitkat ek hitt hvat (hvárt) ..., Hallfred; hitt ek hugða, emphatically, that was what

 6; þó ek hins get, ef ..., yet I guess, that if ..., Skm. 24; vita ská hitt, ef ..., Korm. 40 (in a verse), Ísl. ii. 225 (in a verse); hitt var fyrr = in former times, formerly, Yt., Fs. 94 (in a verse); hinn er sæll, er ..., he is happy, that ..., Hm. 8; maðr hinn er ..., 'man he is that' = the man who, 26; hinn er Surts ór Sökkdölum, Edda 51 (in a verse); veitat hinn er tin tannar, hinn er um eyki annask, Kormak (in a verse); handar innar hægrí mun ek hinnar geta, er ..., the right hand, that hand namely, which ..., Ls.
 38; this usage scarcely occurs except in old poetry. II. demonstr.

HLAUT, f. (not n.); the gender is borne out by the genitive tein hlautar, Vellekla; as also by the dat. hlautinni, Landn. (App.) 336, in an old transcript of the lost vellum Vatnsdyrna (see Kjáln. S. Ísl. ii. 403, where hlautinn):—the blood of sacrifice, used for soothsaying; this word is prob. to be derived from hlutr (hlautr), as an abbreviated form, for hlaut-blóð = sanguis sortidicus, and refers to the rite, practised in the heathen age, of enquiring into the future by dipping bunches of chips or twigs into the blood, and shaking them; those twigs were called teinar, hlaut-teinar, hlaut-viðr, blót-spánn, q. v.; the act of shaking was called hrista teina, to shake twigs, Hým. 1; kjósa hlautvið, to choose lot ebips, Vsp. In Vellekla the true reading is prob. hann (earl Hakon) valdi (from velja, MS. vildi) tein hlautar, meaning the same as kjósa hlautvið in Vsp., an emendation borne out by the words 'felldi blótspán' (Fagrsk. l. c.) in the prose text, which is a paraphrase of the verse; the explanation of the passage in Lex. Poët. is no doubt erroneous. It was also called fella blótspán, see that word, p. 71. The walls of the temple inside and out, the altars, and the worshippers were sprinkled with the blood, the flesh of the slain cattle was to be eaten (whereas the blood was a sacrifice, as well as the means of augury, and was not to be eaten); this rite is described in Hkr. Hásk. S. Góða ch. 16: en blóð þat allt er þar kom af (i. e. from the slain cattle) þá var þat kallat hlaut ok hlaut-bollur þar blóð þat stóð í, ok hlaut-teinar, þat var svá górt sem stóklar (bunches); með því skyldi rjóða stallana öllu saman, ok svá veggi hofsins útan ok innan, ok svá stökkva á mennina; en slátr (the meat) skyldi hafa til mann-fagnaðar: the passages in Eb. ch. 4. p. 6 new Ed., in Kjaln. S. ch. 2, and in Landn. (App.), are derived from the same source as the passage in Hkr., but present a less correct and somewhat impaired text; even the text in Hkr. is not quite clear, esp. the phrase, þat var górt sem stökkull, which prob. means that the hlaut-teinar were bound up in a bunch and used for the sprinkling. The blood-sprinkling mentioned in Exod. xii. 22 illustrates the passage above cited; cp. hleyti, hljóta, and hlutr.

γ. A lot; the ceremony of drawing lots was like that described in the Bible; each party marked his lot (skera or marka hluti), which was thrown into a sheet (lap of a garment, bera or leggja hluti í skaut), and the person came and drew a lot out; (it was not thrown out by shaking.)

δ. Drawing of lots was originally a sacred ceremony; it was used in sacrifice (way of augury, see below), in sharing booty or an inheritance, and in order in which suits came on was decided by lot, in banquets the honour were so assigned (e. g. who was to sit next to the daughter of the king, etc.). Many words in the language refer to this old rite, and the ceremony is thus described: en hluti skyldi skera ok í skaut bera, Fms. i. 140; kom þat ásamt með þeim at hluti skyldi bera í skaut, ... hluti hvárir-veggju una sem hlut segði, vóru þá hlutir markaðir; Norðbrikt til Gyrgis: 'lát mik sjá hversu þú markar þinn hlut' ... hluti eigi báðir einn vegg; hann gerði svá; síðan markaði Norð- ... hlut, ok kastaði í skaut ok svá báðir þeir; síðan gekk sá maðr upp, v. l.) skyldi taka, ok tók upp annan hlutinn milli fingra ... hlutan var at hugat þeim hlutinum ok kenndu þar allir mark Gyrgis, ... hlutir: hvern maðr er sök hefir með at fara í dóm, þá skal hlut skera, einn, þótt hann hafi fleiri sakar í dóm þann, hvers maðr hluti hlut sinn ok bera alla saman í skaut, ok skal maðr taka ... hlut sinn upp, Grág. i. 37; bjóða til hlutfalla ok bera þar hluti í ... hlut, menn báru þá hluti sína í skaut ok tók jarlinn upp; ... svá hlutir til, at Egill skyldi sitja hjá jarls-dóttur um kveldit, Eg. 247; en þá er tólfmenningr var skipaðr til at sitja ok settir hlutir til hvers næst skyldi sitja Ástríði, dóttur Vigfúss hversis, ok hlaut Eyjólftr ávalt at sitja hjá henni, Glúm. 331: nú ræða þeir um góðorðit ok verða eigi ásáttir, vildi hvern sinn hlut (case) fram draga; þá leggja þeir hluti í skaut, ok kom jafnan upp hlutir Silfra, Fs. 68; þeir lögðu hluti á, ok hlaut þrándr, Fær. 2. of sacrifice; vóru þá görvir hlutir af vísinda-mönnum (soothsayers), ok feldr blótspánn til, en svá gekk fréttin, at ..., Fas. i. 452; cp. hristu teina ok á hlaut svá, Hym. i.; and, þá kná Hæmr hlautvið kjósa (= taka upp hluti), Vsp. l. c.; see also hlaut, hlauttein, p. 270.

II. the hlutir were talismans or little images, which people used to wear on their persons; síðan tekr jarl skálar (scales) góðar ... ok fylgðu trau met (weights), annat af gulli en annat af silfri; þar var á líkn-skjala manns, ok hétu þat hlutar (hlotar sem fornamönnum var titt at hafa, add. in v. l.), ok fylgði sú náttúra, at þá er jarl lagði þá í skálar, ok kvað á hvat hvástr skyldi merkja, ok ef sá kom upp (turned up) er hann vildi, þá breytli sá í skálinni svá at varð glamm af. Jarl gaf Einari skálar ok varð hann glaðr við ok síðan kallaðr Einarr Skálarglam, Jónsv. S. (1824) 37, 38; hlutr er horfinn ór þússi þinum sá er Haraldr konungr gaf þér í Hafstríði, ok er hann nú kominn í holt þat er þú munt byggja, ok er á hlutum markaðr Freyr af silfri, Fs. 19; ok vili Freyr þar láta sinn hlut niðr koma er hann vill sitt sæmdar-sæti setja, 22; cp. Landn., hann sendi Finna tvá í hamföllum til Íslands eptir hlut sínum, 174; hann hefir líknesci þórs í pungi sínum af tönn gört ...; nú fannsk engi sá 'hlutr' í hans valdi, Fs. 97: the 'gumna heillir' or talismans, mentioned in Sdm., were prob. hlutr.

The game is best recorded in Friðp. S. ch. 3, and in one of the riddles in Hervar. S. (where the rhymed replies are not genuine): 'Who are the maids that about their unarmed lord, the dark all day defending, but the fair play?' The players were two, as in chess; there was only one king here called the 'unarmed lord'; the pieces (töflur) were white and black, the white attacking, the red defending the hnefi; þat er hneftafl, þat er hneftafl, en hinar hvítari sækja, Fas. i. 474; þat er hneftafl, 476: pieces made of silver are recorded in Gullþ. between king Canute and earl Ulf in Roeskilde A. D. 1027 was probably a hneftafl. hólm-ganga, u, f. 'bolm-gang, bolm-going,' a duel or wager of b fight on an islet or 'holm,' which with the ancients was a kind of appeal or ordeal; and wherever a Thing (parliament) was held, a p was appointed for the wager of battle, as the holm in the Axe River the alpingi. The hólmganga differed from the plain einvigi or due being accompanied by rites and governed by rules, whilst the latter not,—þviat á hólmgöngu er vandhæfi en alls cigi á einvigi, Korm.

The ancient Icel. Sagas abound in wagers of battle, chiefly the Korm ch. 10 and passim: some champions were nicknamed from the cust in the north of Icel. is recorded after this date (about the year 10 1040), but it was not accepted (Lv. S. ch. 30); the wager in Lv. ch was previous (though only by a few years) to the fight between Gunn and Ráfn. It is curious that Jón Egilsson, in his Lives of Bishops (vri about A. D. 1600, Bisk. Ann. ch. 36, Safn i. 64), mentions a wage battle between the parties of the two bishops, Jón Arason and Ögm on the old holm in the Axe River A. D. 1529; but the whole is evide a mere reproduction of the tale of the Horatii in Livy. Maurer th that the two important acts of legislation, the institution of the I

Court in 1004 and the abolition of the ordeal of hólmganga a few y later, are closely connected, as the institution of the new court of ap made the decision by battle superfluous. In Norway, if we are to be Grett. S. ch. 21 (þá tók Eiríkr af allar hólmgöngur í Noregi), the h göngur were abolished about the year 1012. It is very likely that tournaments of the Norman age, fought in lists between two set champions, sprang from the heathen hólmganga, though this was alv a single combat. For separate cases see the Sagas, Korm. S. l. c., Gunn perhaps akin to the mod. Swed. fight in a belt. For England see HREINN, m. [the word is prob. of Finnish origin. From the words of king Alfred, (þa deor he hātað hrānas, Orosius i. 1, § 15, Bosworth's Ed.), it seems that the king knew the name only from Othhere's tale; and when Egil in his poem on king Atheistān (if the verse be genuine) calls Northern England hreinbraut, the reindeers' track, the phrase is prob.

merely poet. for a wilderness. There is however a curious passage in Orkn. (448) where the hunting of reindeer in Caithness is recorded; the Icel. text is here only preserved in a single MS.; but though the Danish translation in Stockholm (of the year 1615) has the same reading, it is probably only a mistake of the Sága; for it is not likely that the Norsemen carried reindeer across the sea; the present breed was introduced into Icel.

HREPPR, m.;—this word remains in 'the Rape of Bramber' in Sussex, and is undoubtedly Scandinavian, being probably derived, as Pal Víðalinn suggested, from hreppa, and thus originally meaning a share, allodium; it may be that the proper name Hrappr (Landn.) is akin (= a yeoman, master of a Rape); for the bad sense of that name (= a traitor) is a metonymy, borrowed from the person of that name in the Njála. After the introduction of Christianity, all Icel. was, for the maintenance of the poor, divided into poor-law districts called hreppar, which still exist, being in most cases, though not always, identical with the sókn or parish; and it is remarkable that the district round the Bishop's seat at Skalholt bears the local name Hreppar, indicating that this division had the Bishop's house as its nucleus. The occurrence therefore of this name in the Landn. is an anachronism; as probably are also the few instances in which hreppr is used as an appellative in records of the heathen age, e.g. Lv. l. c. It is not known when the division into Rapes took place; perhaps it took place gradually during the 11th century; vera á hrepp, koma á hreppinn, to be or become a pauper. In the Grágás a special section (and as it seems one of the oldest) is called 'um Hreppa-skil,' Kb. ii. 171-180; 'um Hreppa-lög,' Sb. i. 443-458. Twenty franklins at least constituted a lawful Rape, Kb. ii. 171. (These remarks are partly due to Konrad Maurer.)

In the days of the Commonwealth there was a committee of five members, called hreppstjórnarmenn (q. v.), which discharged the duties of the present hreppstjóri; með ráði heima-prests ok hreppstjóra, Vm. 116. This word does not occur in the Grágás, but only after A. D. 1281; for the reading hreppstjóri in the D. I. i. 199 (in a deed supposed to be of A. D. 1150) is only found in a mod. transcript, and the original prob. had hreppstjórnarmenn (pl.)

HUNDRÆD, n. pl. hundræð; the form hund- (q. v.) only occurs few old compd words: [Goth. hunda, pl.; A. S. hund; O. H. G. h. the extended form in Hel. and old Frank. hundered; Germ. bun Dan. hundrede; Swed. hundra; the inflexible syllable is prob. alci -ræðr in átt-ræðr]:—a hundred; the Scandinavians of the heathen (and perhaps also all Teutonic people) seem to have known only a decimal hundred (= 12 × 10 or 120); at that time 100 was expressed tíu-tíu, cp. Ulf. taibun-taibund = ten-teen; Pal Vidalin says,—hun tólfætt er sannlega frá heiðni til vor komið, en hið tíræð er líka; Norðrönd hafi ekki vitað af fyrr en Kristni kom hér ok með henni dómr þeirrar aldar, Skýr. s. v. Hundræð (fine): but with the introduction of Christianity came in the decimal hundred, the two being distinguishable adjectives,—tólfætt hundræð = 120, and tírætt hundræð = 100. Butsi old popular duodecimal system continued in almost all matters connected with economical or civil life, in all law phrases, in trade, exchange, perty, value, or the like, and the decimal only in ecclesiastical or scho matters (chronology, e.g. Íb. ch. 1, 10). At the same time the wo speech and writing was commonly used without any specificatio tírætt or tólfætt, for, as Pal Vidalin remarks, every one acquainted the language knew which was meant in each case; even at the p time an Icel. farmer counts his flocks and a fisherman his share (l by the duodecimal system; and everybody knows that a herd or sh one hundred and a half means 120 + 60 = 180. In old writers the po way of counting is now and then used even in chronology and in putation, e.g. when Ari Frode (Íb. ch. 4) states that the year cons three hundred and four days (meaning 364); the census of fr given by the same writer (where the phrase is hundræð heil = w full hundreds) is doubtless reckoned by duodecimal, not decimal hund. Íb. ch. 10; and in the census of priests and churches taken by bisho (about A. D. 1200) 'tíráð' is expressively added, lest duodecimal hund should be understood, Bs. i. 136. The Landn. (at end) contains a ment (from Ari?) that Iceland continued pagan for about a hundred i.e. from about 874–997 A. D. In the preface to Ólafr S., states that two duodecimal hundreds (tvau hundræð tólfæð) elapsed the first colonisation of Iceland before historical writing began (i.e. about A. D. 874–1115): levies of ships and troops are in the law Sagas counted by duodecimal hundreds, e.g. the body-guard of Olave consisted of a hundred híd-men, sixty house-carles and sixty in all 'two hundred' men, i.e. 240, Mork. 126; the sons of earl Strútlhundred men, of whom eighty were billeted out and forty returned, 88, 89; hálf hundrað, a half hundred = sixty, Mork. l. c. 2. of troops = 120; hundraðs-flokkur, Fms. vi. (in a verse). II. sense, hundreds, a host, countless number, see hund-, as also in verb. phrase, hundruðum, by hundreds (indefinitely), Fms. vi. 407, 75, 524: in mod. usage as adjective and indecl., except the pl. in hundruð ásaðum, Dipl. iv. 10.

As value, a hundred, i. e. a hundred and twenty ells of the wadmal, and then simply value to that amount (as a pound sterling worth). All property, real as well as personal, is even at present taxed by hundreds; thus an estate is a 'twenty, sixty, hundred' and a franklin gives his tithable property as amounting to so and so many hundreds. As for the absolute value of a hundred, a few examples are sufficient, thus e. g. a milch cow, or six ewes with lambs, for a hundred, and a hundrað and a kúgildi (cow's value) are the charge for the alimentation of a pauper for twelve months by law (Jb. 165) fixed to four hundred and a half for a male person, three hundred and a half for a female; cp. also the phrase, það hundrað í hettunni, there is no hundred at stake, no great risk! In times a double standard was used,—the wool or wadmal standard, hundrað talið = a hundred by tale, i. e. a hundred and twenty ells above, and a silver standard, called hundrað vegit, a hundred by weight or hundrað silfrs, a hundred in silver, amounting to two marks. Half = twenty ounces = sixty örtugar; but how the name hundred came to be applied to it is not certain, unless half an örtug was taken as a unit.

It is probable that originally both standards were identical, denoted by the phrase, sex álfa eyrir, six ells to an ounce, or a hundred and twenty ells equal to twenty ounces (i. e. wadmal and silver standard); but according as the silver coinage was debased, the phrases between nine, ten, eleven, twelve ells to an ounce (N. G. L. i. 80, 81, 82, passim), which denote bad silver; whereas the phrase 'three ells to an ounce' (griggja álfa eyrir, Sturl. i. 163, passim, or a hundred in equal to half a hundred in silver) must refer either to a double ell or silver twice as pure: the passage in Grág. i. 500 is somewhat obscure, as also Rd. 233: the words vegin, silfrs, or talin are often omitted in most cases no specification is given, and the context must decide which of the two standards is there meant; the wool standard is the older one, but in cases of wergild the silver standard seems always to be understood; thus a single wergild (the fine for a man's life) was valued, Njálá passim.

2. the phrases, hundrað frítt, a hundred free, Fms. i. 226; tólf hundruð mórend, twelve hundred in dark wadmal, Nj. 225; hundrað í búsgögnum ok í húsbúningi, Vm. hundraðs-gripir, hestir, hross, kapall, hvíla, sæng, rekkja, psaltari, etc., a horse, a bed, etc., of a hundred's value, Am. 2, 10, Vm. 25, 53, Jm. 3, 30; hundraðs-úmagi, a person whose maintenance is valued, Vm. 156; hundraðs virði, a hundred's value, 68. For the use of the Sagas and laws passim, and for more information see Dr. Jón's Essay in Burnt Njal.

A hundred, a political division which in olden times was common to Teut. nations, but is most freq. in old Swedish laws, where hundreds made a hérað or shire; cp. the A. S. and Engl. hundred, a hundredredum; old Germ. hundredti, see Grimm's Rechts Altertümer; the centum pagi of Caesar, Bell. Gall. iv. ch. 1, is probably the writer's misconception of the Teut. division of land into hundreds; cp. the case with Tacit. Germ. ch. 12: cp. the Swed. local names, Åttundal, Åttundaland, and Tiundaland, qs. Fjadr-hunda land, Åttundaland, Tiundaland, i. e. a combination of four, eight, ten hundred. The original meaning was probably a community of a hundred free franklins or captains. This division is not found in Icel.

HVERR, pron. interrog. and indef.; at the present day proncd. hv with u throughout, and in mod. printed books usually spelt hvör, a no doubt derived from the dual hvár (hvorr), used in a plur. sense: its declension, see Gramm. p. xxi; an acc. hverjan, Hým. 39; hver morgin, Vsp. 22, Fb. ii. 71 (in a verse); hverjan dag, Vpm. 11, 18, 23, Gm. 8, 14, 20, 29; hverjan veg, Vpm. 18; whence the contracted hværn. To the Goth. plur. answers the Icel. hværr, with characteristic j, w is used in sing. and plur. alike. In the neut. sing. the two forms, hvær and hvort, are distinguished thus, that hvat (hvad) is interrog. h indef., e. g. hvað barn, what bairn? but hvert barn, every bairn.]

Hence the following week was termed the Holy Week (Helga Vika). Hence, Pentecost derived its name from the white garments, called Hvíta-dagar, the White days, i. e. Whitsun-week; frá því innum fyrsta skulu vera vikur sjau til Drottins-dags í Hvítadagum, Drottinsdag í Hvítadögum skulu vér halda sem hinn fyrsta dag, K. þ. The name that at last prevailed was Hvítasunna, i. e. Whitsun, D. N. ii. 263, 403: Hvítasunnudagr, m. the Whitsunday, Fb. ii. 546, Fms. viii. 63, v. l.: Hvítasunnudags-vika, Whitsun-week, Fb. ii. 546; Þáskaviku, ok Hvítasunnudagsvikur, ok fyrir Jónsvöku, ok svá fyrir Michials-messu, N. G. L. i. 150; Hvítadagshátíð, Thom. 318. As the English was the mother-church of Norway and Iceland, the Icelandic eccl. phrases are derived from the English language. See Bingham's Orig. s. vv. White Garments, Dominica in Albis, where however no reference is given to Iceland. In modern Denmark and Norway the old name has been preserved by Pindse, i. e. Pfingsten, derived from the Greek word, Pentecost, in Icel., as in Engl., only the name Hvítasunna is known. In Denmark the people make a practice of thronging to the woods sun morning to see the rising of the sun, and returning with branches in their hands, the trees being just in bud at that season. HÖFUNDR, m., gen. ar; the masc. inflex. -undr reminds one of Gothic (Gramm. p. xxxii. B. V); in old writers the word is only four times, always in the sense of a judge, and ref. chiefly to Gothland in Sweden; Höfundr (a mythol. pr. name manna vitrastr, ok svá réttðæmr, at hann hallaði aldri réttum dóm ok af hans nafni skyldi sá höfundr heita í hverju ríki er mál dæmði, Fas. (Hervar. S.) i. 523, cp. 513: as also in Hrólfs S. Krakfering to Gothland), höfundr einn var þar til settr at skora þeim með sannindum, settuss margir í þetta sæti, ok kallaði höfundr í sæma, þórir gengr seinast ok sezk hann þegar í stólin; höfundr þér er sætið hæfligast, ok muntu dæmðr til þessarar stjórmar, Fas. sigr-höfundr, the judge of victory, the Lord of battle, a name given Odin by Egil, Stor. 21: lastly in Thorodd, skáld er höfundar allrar eða máls-greina, sem smíðir málmgripa (?), eðr lögmenn laga, the are judges in all matters of grammar and syntax, as smíðs in manship, and lawyers in law, Skálda (Thorodd) 164; this passage as the preceding is erroneously rendered in the earlier translations, in Lex. Poët. II. an author, originator; the revival of ancient word, in quite a different sense, is curious; it does not occur of the earliest glossaries of the 17th century nor in the Bible. Víðalín, but, as it seems for the first time, in the Lexidion Islandicum, published at Copenhagen A. D. 1734, as a rendering of the auctor, and was probably inserted by some learned philologist (Jón son?) from the passage in Skálda, by a mistake. 2. by the end of the century it came to be used = a writer, and is now freq. in sense, either rit-höfundr or singly; but still in 1781, in the preface of that year, ritsmíðr (writ-smith) and höfundr are both used, so that the latter was not yet settled, though at present the use of the word is quite fixed.

höku-nótt, f. mid-winter night, about the time of Epiphany, when the heathen Yule began; a ðr. λεγ.: hann setti þat í lögum at hefja Jóla-hald sem Kristnir menn . . . en áðr var Jóla-hald hafit Hökunótt, þat var miðsveitar-nótt (thus in Fms. i. 32, l. c.), ok haldin þriggja (þrettán?)

nátta Jól, Hkr. i. 138 (Hák. S. Adalst. ch. 15). The Scot. bogmaney, is the last day of the year or a feast given on that day, is a remnant of this ancient word. The heathen Yule seems among the Scandinavians to have been celebrated about three weeks later than Christmas; but the Norse king Hakon, who had been brought up in Christian England, altered the time of the festival, so as to make it correspond with the English Yule or Christmas; and so the heathen hökunótt came to represent our Christmas Eve. The etymology is not known.

höld-borinn, part. born of a höld (see höldr), enjoying a höld's right, Hdl. 11, 16, N. G. L. i. 346.

höld-maðr, m. = höldr, N. G. L. i. 44, 55, 71, 175.

HÖLDR, m., in old MSS. spelt hælðr or hælpr, denoting that the d is inflexive, not radical; [the word therefore is not to be derived from halda, but is identical with A. S. hælð, Germ. held, whence mod. Swed.

and Dan. hjalta and held, see halr]:—a Norse law term, a kind of bigger yeoman, like the statesman of Westmoreland, i. e. the owner of allodial land, mod. Norse odelsbonde; the höld is to be distinguished from a hersir (q. v.) or a lendr maðr, who held land in fee from the king, see the interesting story in Har. S. Harðr. ch. 62 (Fms. vi. 278); the höld is thus defined, sá er hælðr er hann hefir óðil at erðum tekit bæði eptir föður ok móður, þau er hans forellrar (forefathers) hafa átt áðr fyrir þeim, N. G. L. ii. 146; hölda tvá eða bændr ina beztu, i. 251. In old Norway the churchyards were divided into four parts; in the first were buried the lendir menn, next them the hölds and their children (hölds-lega), then the freed men (leysingjar), and lastly the thralls (man, q. v.) nearest to the wall; the höld had right to twice as much as the simple franklin, and half as much as the lendr maðr, e. g. bóandi hálfan annan eyri, höldr þjá ára, lendr maðr sex ára, jarl tólf ára, konungr þrjár merkr, N. G. L. i. 45, cp. 55, 71, 81; þegnar ok hælðar, svá eru búendr kallaðir, Edda 107; hauðlar, þat er búendr þeir, er gildir eru af ættum eða réttum fullum, 94;

Björn hlaut annan bústað góðan ok virðlegan, görðisk hann ekki hand-genginn konungi, því var hann kallaðr Björn höldr, Eg. 108; lends manns son skal taka hölds rétt ef hann fær eigi lönd, N. G. L. i. 71; hann veltisk ör jarldóminum ok tók hölds rétt, Orkn. 12: for the weregild to be paid for a höld (hölds-gjöld) see N. G. L. i. 81: a law of king St. Olave ordered that Icelanders whilst in Norway should enjoy the right of a höld; Íslendingar eigu at hafa hölds-rétt í Noregi, him 'the kinsman of the hölds', cp. also Rm. 21, Gs. 17; h. inn hviti, Hölgi, a, m. a pr. name, in the Hb. spelt Hœlgi; this is the old Norse forth, whereas the old and mod. Icel. form is Helgi, and of a woman, Helga, u, f., Landn.; prob. contracted from Hælogi, cp. the Dan.

Holger and Russian Olga: Hölgi was the name of a mythol. king, Edda 83, whence Hölga-brúðr, f. the bride of Hölgi, or Hölga-brúll, n.

hörga-brúðr are less correct forms, Nj. 131 (v. l.), Fb. i. 213; for the various readings in different MSS. see Jóns S. ch. 44, Nj. ch. 89: this is the name of two weird sisters worshipped by the earls of Hlaðir; the passage in Skálda l. c. refers to some lost myth concerning these sisters.

HÖLL, f., gen. hallar, often spelt hall without umlaut, Fb. i. 212, l. 26, Fas. iii. 42, 87, Fms. viii. 191, v. l.; as also rhymed so in poets, e. g. Geisli 11; [A. S. beal, gen. bealle; Engl. ball; Hel. balla; but not found in old and mid. H. G., the mod. Germ. balle being a borrowed word, Grimm's Gr. iii. 427]:—a ball, but in the Norse only of a king's or earl's hall, whereas a private dwelling is called skáli, eldhús, q. v.; and thus 'hall' never could be used of an Icel. dwelling. In earlier times it seems to have had a more general sense, which remains in a verse of Kormak, Korn. 42:—in the mythology and old poems 'hall' is also used of the hall of gods, giants, Vpm., Hým., Lv.; Val-höll, Valballa, the hall of the slain, of Odin, Grn., Edda: as also Guds höll, God's hall=the heaven, Geisli; dags höll, days' hall, the sky; höll fjalla, mountain hall, the sky; lifs höll, life's hall, the breast, Lex. Poët.:—in prose constantly, konungs-höll, a king's hall, or hall simply, passim. For the building, structure, seats of a hall, see the Sagas passim, Fagrsk. ch. 219, 220, Hrólfs S. Kr. ch. 34, 40, Jónsv. S. ch. 5, 22, Völs. S. ch. 3, Hálfs S. ch. 12, Eg. S. ch. 8, Edda 2, 30–33, 82. As all heathen Scandinavian buildings were of timber, the hall of stone of Nj. ch. 6 is no doubt an anachronism. HÖRG, m., never f., for the form hörg (Landn. 111) is merely an error; [A. S. bearg; O. H. G. baruc]:—a beaten place of worship. Distinction is to be made between hof (temple) and horg; the hof was a house of timber, whereas the horg was an altar of stone (the hátimbraðir in Vpm. is not literal) erected on high places, or a sacrificial cairn (like haugr), built in open air, and without images, for the horg itself was to be stained with the blood of the sacrifice; hence such phrases as, to 'break' the horgs, but 'burn' the temples. The horg worship reminds one of the worship in high places of the Bible. The notion of a 'high place' still remains in the popular Icel. phrase, það eru ekki uppi nema hæstu hörgar, only the highest borgs jut out, when all lies under a deep snow. In provincial Norse a dome-shaped mountain is called borg (Ivar Aasen). The worship on horgs seems to be older than that in temples, but was in after times retained along with temple worship, and then, it seems, specially reserved for the worship of the goddesses or female guardians (disir), Hervar. S. ch. i, Hdl. i. c., Edda i. c., cp. also Hörga-brúðr, f. the bride of the borgs, see Högli. Many of the old cairns and hows are no doubt horgs or high places of worship of the heathen age. A third way of worshipping is recorded, viz. a portable booth or tabernacle in which the god was carried through the land, mentioned in Tacit. Germ. ch. 40; traces of this ancient worship were still found in Sweden at the close of heathendom, see the interesting tale of Gunnar Helming in Fms. ii. 73-78.

G. buot, Dutch boed, Germ. but may perhaps be identical; but A. S. bæt, Engl., Dan., and Swed. bat certainly answer to the old hötttr, cp. also hetta, q. v.]:—a bood, in olden times only a cowl fastened to a cloak, as is seen from numerous instances, Fms. i. 149, ii. 72, viii. 368, x. 225, 229, 301, Eg. 375, 407, Grág. ii. 132: a cowl of fell, þófa-hötttr, Dropl. 13, Nj. 179.

H.: a hat in the mod. sense was unknown to the men of old; even the hat-like helmet was called stál-húfa, a steel cap, not stál-hötttr.

II. in poetry the head is called hattar land, -hauðr, -stallr, -fell, -steði, the land, knoll, fell, stibby of the bood; or hatt-staup, n. a hat-knoll, A.: Odin is represented wearing a hött, and so the helmet is called the bood of Odin, etc.; as also Ála hötttr: the vaulted sky is foldar hötttr = earth's bood, Lex. Poët.: dular-h., huldar-h., a biding bood, bood of disguise. hattar-maðr, m. a booded man, man in disguise, Rd. 272; Slö-hötttr, 'Deep-bood,' was a favourite name of Odin from his travelling in disguise, cp. Robin Hood.

III. a pr. name, Fas.

I I J

I is the ninth letter; in the old Runic alphabet it was called fis or (Skálda 176), and represented by l (is köllum brú breiða of the Rm poem), a form borrowed from the Greek or Latin: but 'stunginn' (þ) was in later Runes used to represent e.

A. PRONUNCIATION, SPELLING.—I is either a vowel (i), or consonant (j), called jod: these are here treated separately: 1. the vowel i is sounded either short (i) or long (i), the short (i) like Engl. i prolonged with a breath; but it is almost certain that in olden times it was sounded short, as in Engl. wit.

2. the long (i) is sounded Engl. e or ee in evil, feet. 3. the j is sounded as Engl. y before vowel, jata, jarð, jól, as yata, yard, yole. The oldest writers witness to the use of j as a consonant; thus Thorodd says, — þu hann verðr fyrir samhljóðanda settr, Skálda 164; and the second grammarian, — en ef hljóðstafr (vowel) er næstr eptir hann, þá skiptisk hann málstafr (consonant), svo sem já, jörð eða jör, 170; and Olave Hvítak — i ok u hafa því fleiri greinir, at þeir eru stundum samhljóðendr, se þessum orðum, iarl and uitr, 176; but in syllables beginning with j, jo, ju in old alliterative poetry it always stands for the v from the earliest poems down to the 15th century, e. g. jörð or eiðja-græna, Vsp. 58; viltu nokkut jötunninn eiga | ytum görir hann seiga, Þrymlur 2. 2; Ölmðr hafði annan dag | járnið þetta at Skíða R. 64, which, as now pronounced, would sound harsh, i in modern poetry syllables beginning with j cannot be used alternatively with any other letter, cp. Pass. 37. 1, 10, 40. 8, 46. 3, 11, only in such words as eg (jeg), eta (jeta) can i serve both as a vowel and consonant, see Pass. 6. 2; but jeg in 5. 5, 10, (the verse 6 of same hymn is a poetical licence); so also the name Jesús is now then used alliteratively with a vowel, 47. 18, 21; the hymns of Reformation follow the same usage. The pronunciation of j therefore to have changed: in early times it was probably similar to Engl. e in ear, tear, bear; an additional proof of this is, that the spelling was, as in Anglo-Saxon, ea, eo . . .; and Thorodd himself wrote ea, e. g. eafn, earn, earl, for jafn, járn, jarl, see his words: old poets e sometimes makes two syllables, e. g. in the verse cited Skálda 164 (of A. D. 1018); as also in the name Njáll (Niel), v is dissyllabic in the verses, Nj. ch. 136, 146. At a still earlier j was probably sounded purely as a vowel.

II. in an MSS. i serves for both i and j; in MSS., esp. of the 15th century used ornamentally for initial i, e. g. jnn = inn, as also in the double i, e. g. tíjd = tíð, mítt = mítt, the j was introduced into print only in last year of the eighteenth century. 2. an i is often inserted in g, esp. after g, k, so as to mark the aspirate sound, e. g. gieta = geta, giæta, kíær = kær, etc.: in inflexions it is also more correct to write e bæjar, than eyar, bæar:—ji is not written, but pronounced, e. g. víljí), but vilja.

B. CHANGES.—The i and e are exchanged in many root syllables, but i is usually the older, e the later if not the modern form; if and ef, brinna and brenna, tvinnr and tvennr, þrimr and þremr, and meðal, snemma and snemma, gingu and gengu, fingu and fengu and tegr: the article varies between enn and inn:—the inflex. -endi:—Norse MSS. spell mek, þek, sek, = mik, þik, sik (e. g. T. Cd. Holm.); -ligr and -legr, gagligr and gaglegr: for the inflex. and i see introduction to letter E (signif. B), p. 114:—i for y in old: in firir, lífr, mindi, skildi, minni (moutb), minnast (to kiss, moutb):—u are interchanged in inflexion, as, morginn and morgun, vandröndull; but esp. in the adjective inflexions -igr and -ugr, blóðigr blóðugr, auðigr and auðugr.

II. the j in most instances originates from an e, either through absorption or contraction, as in jör (q. v.) through the dissolution or breaking of e, as in jörð (q. v.); again, the initial i is in most instances caused by absorption; as of n in i (in compds; of v or b in lífr (evil) and compds; of d in some compds in i:—in Gothic there is only a single word (eisarn, i. e. isarn = iron) long i initial.

III. by comparison with other Teutonic languages it is seen that a radical initial i or j has in the Scandinavian been dropped in a few words, while it has been kept in Gothic, Saxon, and German Icel. ár, Goth. jēr, Engl. year, Germ. jahr; Icel. ungr, Goth. juggs, young; Icel. ok, Goth. juk, Engl. yoke, Germ. joeb, Lat. jugum; ami, ómurligr, and O. H. G. jamar, Germ. jammer; Icel. upp, Goth. up; Icel. ér (ye), Goth. jár; Icel. ostr (a cheese), cp. Engl. in two words, jarteign and jurt, both of them probably foreign, stands for w: on the other hand, because of the resolution or breaking of vowels (Gramm. p. xxix, bottom), words which in Engl. and begin with e are in Icel. often to be found under j, thus Icel. jör Scot. yerib = Engl. earth, Germ. erde: there are also a few stray — jata (a manger) for eta, jeta for eta, jeg for eg (ek).

Icel. i answers to Ulf. ei (risa, Goth. reisjan), to mod. Germ. ei in Engl. i as in time, Icel. tími; in early German the diphthongs ei and i as in Icelandic, distinguished (zeit, isarn, = mod. zeit, eisen).

un. in a few words the Icel. short i is represented by an e, thus p. líðr, víðr, síðr, biðja, límr, vinnr, sinn, = Dan. ved, led, ved, sed, ven, sene, probably owing to the fact that the old Danish pronunciation of i was not the same as the present Icelandic.

ÍKORNI, a, m. a squirrel. This word is undoubtedly, as Grimm suggests (s. v. eichhorn), not of Teut. origin, but a popular corruption of the Gr. σκίουρος (= shade-tail), from which word all modern European languages have borrowed the name of this animal; A. S. æcurn; early Dutch encoren; Dutch eekboren, eikboren, inkboren; O. H. G., mid. H. G., and Germ. eichborne, eichborn; Dan. egern; Swed. ickorn, ekorre; in the Romance languages, old Fr. escuriere; Fr. écureuil; Ital. sciriuolo; whence Engl. squirrel. The word íkorni occurs in the heathen poem Gm., but the word is outside the metre, spoiling the flow of the verse, and was no doubt added afterwards; therefore, instead of 'Rata-töskr heitir íkorni | er renna skal,' read 'Rata-töskr heitir | er renna skal.' Perhaps the ancient Scand. name of the animal was töskr, akin to Engl. tusk, A. S. tux, from its sharp teeth, and then Rati (= the climber?) would in the verse be the pr. name, töskr the appellative of that animal; and thus Rata-töskr would stand for Ratitöskr = Rati the squirrel; see also Edda, O. H. 85, Sks. 115, Gpl. 448.

jarkna-steinn, m. [prob. a for. word derived from the A. S. eorcnan-stán]:—a gem, it occurs only in the following poems, Vkv. 23, 33, Gkv. i. 18, 3, 9, which may all have been composed by one man, who borrowed the word from the A. S.

JARL, m., older form earl, [Hel. erl; A. S. eorl; Engl. earl]: this word had a double sense, one old and common to the Saxons as well as the earliest Scandinavians, one later and specifically Norse, which afterwards became English through the Norse and Danish invasion, and was finally established by the Norman Conquest.

A. A gentle, noble man, a warrior, and collect. gentlefolk, as opp. to the churl folk or common people (karlar, búendr); thus the old poem Rígs-mál distinguishes three classes, earls, churls, and thralls (jarla-ætt, karla-ætt, þræla-ætt); so also in A. S. eorl and ceorl are almost proverbially opposed; in the old Saxon poem Heliand, 'erl' is used about a hundred times = a man. Prof. Munch suggested that the name of the Teutonic people Eruli or Heruli simply represents an appellative (warriors), which the Roman writers took to be a proper name. In the Scandin. countries this use of jarl is rare and obsolete, but remains in poet. phrases, in old laws, and in law phrases; oddar görva jarli megin, spears make the earl's might, Mk. v.; rudda ek sem jarlar forðum mér til landa, I won me lands like the earls of yore, Glúm. (in a verse): jarls yndi, an earl's delight = a man's delight, Hm. 96; jörlum öllum óðal batni, Gh. 21; hlaðit ér, earlar, eikiköstinn, 20; ítrar jarla-brúðir, 'earl's-brides,' ladies, Gkv. i. 3; alsnottir jarlar, the gentle earls, 2; eggja ek yðr, jarlar, Am. 54; jarla einbani, 'earl-slayer' = ἀνδροκτόνος, Em., Hkm.; karl-fólk ok jarla, churl folk and earl folk, Sighvat; eitt mein sækir hvern jarl, every earl (man) has his ill luck, Fb. ii. (in a verse): in the law, jarls jörð, an earl's estate, is opp. to konungs jörð, a king's estate, in the phrase, hálfan rétt skal hann taka er hann kömr á jarls jörð, en þá allan ok fullan er hann kömr á konungs jörð, Grág. (Kb.) i. 192, for this is undoubtedly the bearing of this disputed passage; jarlmaðr is opp. to búkarl, Fms. vii. (in a verse); so also karlmaðr (q. v.) in its oldest sense is opp. to jarlmaðr, = churl-man and earl-man; hirð-jarl = hirðmaðr, Fms. xi. 302, v. l.; berg-jarl, poet. a 'crag-earl' = a giant, Edda (in a verse); bak-jarl, a 'back-earl,' an enemy in one's rear; of-jarl (q. v.), an 'over-earl,' an over-bearing man.

B. A chief, as a title, specially Norse and Danish. The Landnáma, which is almost our only source for the political and personal history of Norway before king Harald Fairhair and the settlement of Iceland, records several chiefs of the 8th and 9th centuries who bore an earl's name as a family dignity; Ívarr Upplendinga-jarl (Upplönd, a Norse county), Ásbjörn jarl Skerja-blesi, Eyvindr jarl, 317; Atli jarl Mjóvi af Gaulum (a Norse county), Þorkell Naumdala-jarl (earl in Naumdale, a Norse county), 281; Grjótarðar jarl í Sölva (a county), 297; and as a family title, the famous Háleygja-jarlar (the earls of the Norse county Hálogaland, whose pedigree from Odin was drawn out in the old poem Háleygja-tal; Hákon jarl Grjótarðarson, etc.): so also the Mæra-jarlar, the earls of Mæri (a Norse county), the foremost of whom was Rögnvaldr Mæra-jarl, the forefather of the earls of the Orkneys (Orkneyja-jarlar) and the earls of Rouen (Rúðu-jarlar = the dukes of Normandy).

II. along with the Danish and Norse invasion the name appears in England, Bjartnár jarl in Ireland, Landn.; Hunda-Steinarr, an earl in England, id.; see also the Saxon Chronicle passim, where the very name indicates a Danish or Norse connexion. It is very likely that many of the earls of the Landnáma were sovereign chiefs, differing from kings only in title, for in old poetry a king and an earl were addressed in the same way.

III. about the time of Harald Fairhair all the petty chiefs became liegemen under one king, the earl being in dignity nearest the king, answering to comes

JÓL, n. pl., in rhymes, gölg, Jóla, Ó. H. (in a verse); [A. S. geól, sometimes used of the whole month of December, whereas December is also called æra geola = fore Yule, and January æftera geola = after Yule; the plur. in Icel. perhaps refers to this double month. The origin and etymology of the word Yule is much contested, and has been treated at length by Grimm (Gesch. der Deutschen Sprache), who tries to make out a relation between the Lat. Jūlus or Jūlius and the Teut. Yule, the one being a midsummer month, the other a midwinter month; like former etymologists, he also derives the word from hjól, a wheel, as referring to the sun's wheeling round at midwinter and midsummer time. The resemblance of the words is striking, as also the old northern celebration of the midsummer feast Jónsvaka (see below), which was in fact a kind of midsummer Yule.]

B. Yule, a great feast in the heathen time, afterwards applied to Christmas (as still in North. E.) In Icel. popular usage Yule-eve is a kind of landmark by which the year is reckoned, so that a man is as many years old as he has passed Yule nights, hafa lifað (so and so) margar Jóla-nætr; for the year counts from Yule night, whence the phrase, vera illa or vel á ár kominn, to become well or ill in the year; thus a person born shortly before Yule is 'illa á ár kominn', for at next Yule he will be reckoned one year old, whereas one born just after it is 'vel á ár kominn'. The heathen Yule lasted thirteen days, whence are derived the names Þrettándi, the thirteenth = Epiphany, i. e. the 6th of January, as also the Engl. 'Twelfth-night'; it is however probable that the heathen feast was held a little later than the Christian (see höku-nótt). The heathen Yule was a great merry-making, and tales of ghosts, ogres, and satyrs were attached to it, esp. the Jóla-sveinar or 'Yule-lads', a kind of goblins or monster satyrs, thirteen in number, one to each day of the feast, sons of the kidnapping hag Grýla (q. v.), whose names were used to frighten children with, see Isl. þjóðs. i. 219, 220. As the night lengthens and the day shortens, the ghosts gain strength, and reach their highest at Yule time, see Grett. ch. 34-37, 67-70, Eb. ch. 34. Flóam. S. ch. 22. The day next before Yule is called atfanga-dagr (q. v.) Jóla, when stores were provided and fresh ale brewed, Jóla-öl. Passages in the Sagas referring to Yule are numerous, e. g. Hervar. S. ch. 4, Hálfð. S. Svarta ch. 8, Har. S. Hárf. ch. 16 (in a verse), Hák. S. Góða ch. 12, 15, 19, Ó. H. ch. 151, Eb. ch. 31, Landn. 3. ch. 15 (in the Hb.), Bjarn. 51 sqq., Sturl. iii. 127. As for Yule games cp. the Norse and Danish Jóla-buk, Jóla-geit (Ivar Aasen) = a Yule goat, Dan. jule-leg = a Yule game.

II. St. John Baptist's Day (June 24) is the northern countries a kind of midsummer Yule, and was in Norway and Sweden celebrated with bonfires, dances, and merriment; and tales of fairies and goblins of every kind are connected with St. John's summer as well as with Yule-eve in winter. The name of the feast varies.—Jóns-dagr, m., Jóns-messa, u. f., Jónsvöku-dagr, the day, mass of St. John = the 24th of June; Jóns-nótt, f., Jóns-nætr, u. f., St. John's eve, 'John's-wake', Rb. 530, Sturl. iii. 59, N. G. L. i. 340, 343, Fms. viii. 357, ix. 7: Jónsvöku-skeið, Fms. x. 49: Jónsvöku-leyti, id. In Norway the feast is at present called Jónsoka = Jónsvak and the fires Jónsoku-brising (cp. the Bisinga-men of the Edda). The origin of this feast is no doubt heathen, being a worship of light and the sun, which has since been adapted to a Christian name and the Christian calendar. For the fairy tales connected with this feast, see Isl. þjóðs. which tales again call to mind Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream. Jónsmessu-öl, n. ale brewed for St. John's day, N. G.
